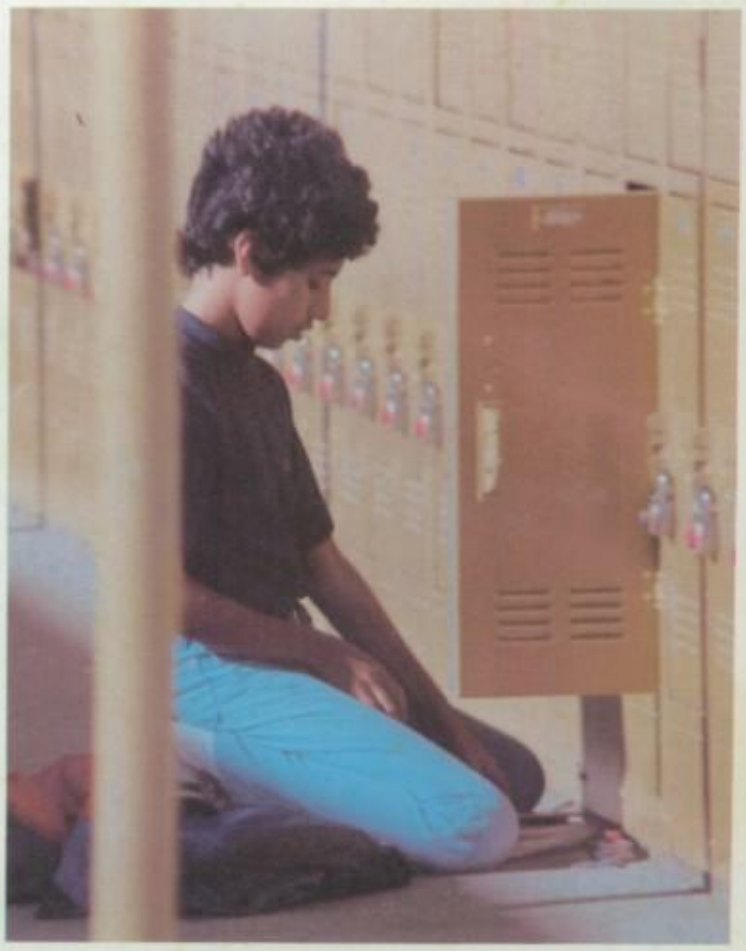
VOLUME 24



TIME . . . always passing, never waiting, yesterdays, todays, tomorrows. Time — weaving strands of memories . . . unforgettable, irretrievable, precious moments frozen in time.

There is a time for everything — a time to be happy, a time to relax, a time to listen, to talk with God, a time to celebrate, to work, a time to learn and love and grow. There is time for quiet solitude and time to spend with those who care. These are the gifts of time to us — the moments, hours, months, and years.

Time is ever present in our minds — five minutes before the bell, one week before vacation, one year until graduation. It passes slowly when we wait and quickly when we are not ready to move on.

Take time to stop, time to look back again. Take time . . . and live each day to the fullest. For the strands of time are running fast.

Working with positive dedication, Uni's 1980 ASB Cabinet showed great progress in serving the students. Last year, the Associated Student Body elected these eight students to represent all students. The Cabinet meets once a month to organize fundraisers, assemblies, dances and other student activities, and strives every day to achieve its goals, working with the administration to satisfy both the students' and the school's needs.

Spirit Week

Green, green, green,
Freshmen show their spirit,
Students suited up for Sports Day,
U-N-I, let's hear it!

Everything is getting bluer,
Super Sophomores reign,
"Little kids" are everywhere,
Uni, win the game!

Look and see the Mellow Yellow,
Juniors on the rise,
All sorts of hats, gloves, and wigs,
Uni spirit, reach the skies!

Walk through mighty Senior Country,
Look at all that red,
Rowdy, "Seniors Rule" the scene,
Uni, forge ahead!

Red, gold red, and gold,
Uni's day is here at last
All the classes show their colors,
Spirit Week's a blast!

Fans flocked to USD on Friday, November 7 to watch the University. Dons battle the Serra Conquistadors. The sound of Uni's band filled the air as spectators found spots on the benches, railings, and walls to watch the game.

The game began! Anticipation and excitement reflected in people's eyes as the players ran onto the field. The Conquistadors, sorry to say, ended the half with 20-8.

Cars and floats paraded around the field as the halftime ceremonies began. Homecoming princesses and their escorts were presented to the strains of the song, "Yesterday." The crowd cheered as Rita Clark was crowned Queen. The Class of '81 won Spirit Week and Float.

The Dons picked up in the fourth quarter but time ran out with the score 35-24 Serra.

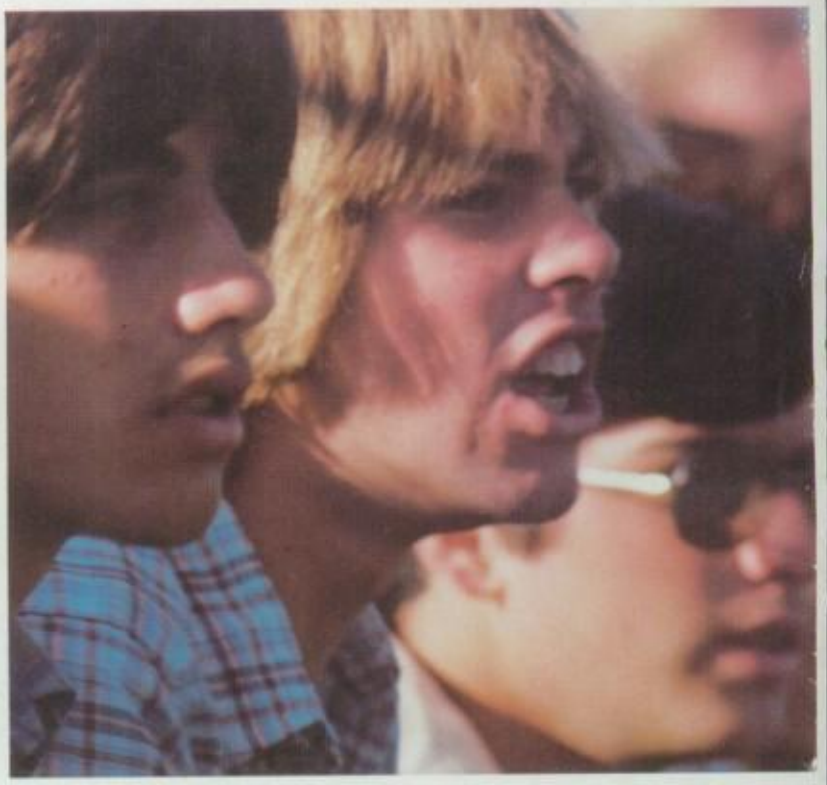
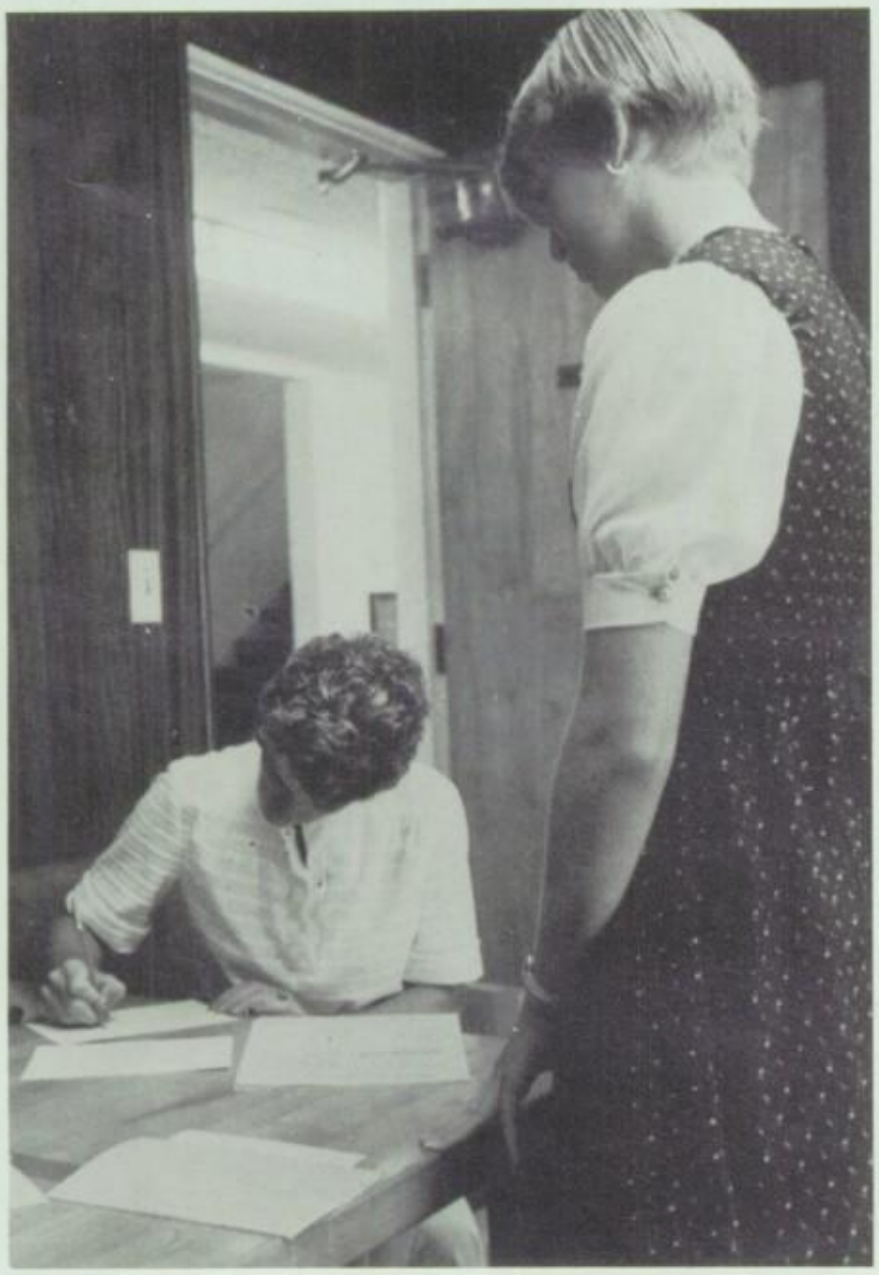
Here they are! University's Varsity Cheerleading Squad! Yes, Uni, these people were down on the field, out on the gym floor, dancing and cheering our teams on to victory. Male "Yell-leaders" returned to Uni this year in Tom Franklin and Jerry Roller. Marivi Lopez, Head Cheerleader, praises this group as the best she's ever worked with, mainly because they were all eager to learn and work together.

Uni has a proud squad here. Rated the most spirited group attending the National Cheerleaders Association summer camp, who wouldn't be? Leaving the camp with four spirit sticks, they returned to Uni with their spirit "Sky High!"



REGISTRATION SIGNALS START OF NEW YEAR



Just when the relaxation of summer was beginning to sink in, it was destroyed by the moment students and teachers had hoped would never come: Registration Day, one of the first signs that another year of high school was ahead. For some, it would be the first.

In keeping with 1980's inflationary trend, the prices of books, locks, PE clothes and ASB fees soared. One math book cost $30, and Advanced Placement History students paid more than $70 for their materials.

The confusion about schedules and lockers, familiar to veteran Uni students, traumatized newcomers. There was, however, something different about this particular Registration Day. Those students fortunate enough to have last names beginning A-M had retake pictures not once, but twice, because of faulty camera equipment.

Registration gave us all a chance to reflect on the most important fact: only 175 days until summer vacation rolls around again.

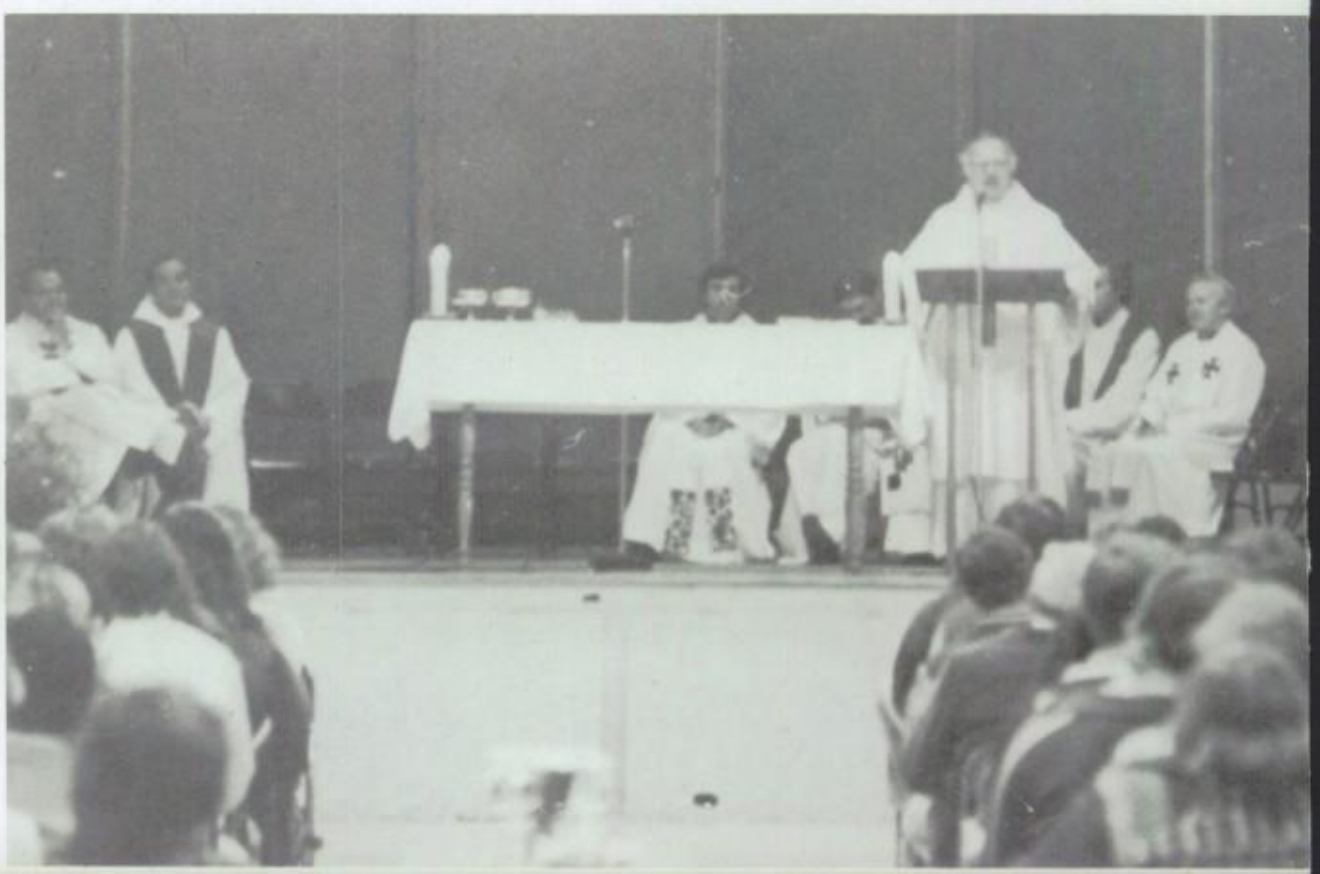
MASSES ARE TIME

We gathered together before the Lord to express our spirituality and unity at masses. At the Homecoming Mass, guest celebrant Fr. Dan Griesgraber, an alumnus, brought a new dimension to our liturgies.

For the first time in a decade, Bishop Leo T. Maher celebrated with us at the Christmas Mass. There were many familiar faces at the altar when priests from local parishes visited at another mass.

The folk group, led by Mr. Shafranske, provided the music for all our masses, and the school acquired songbooks so that each student could participate.

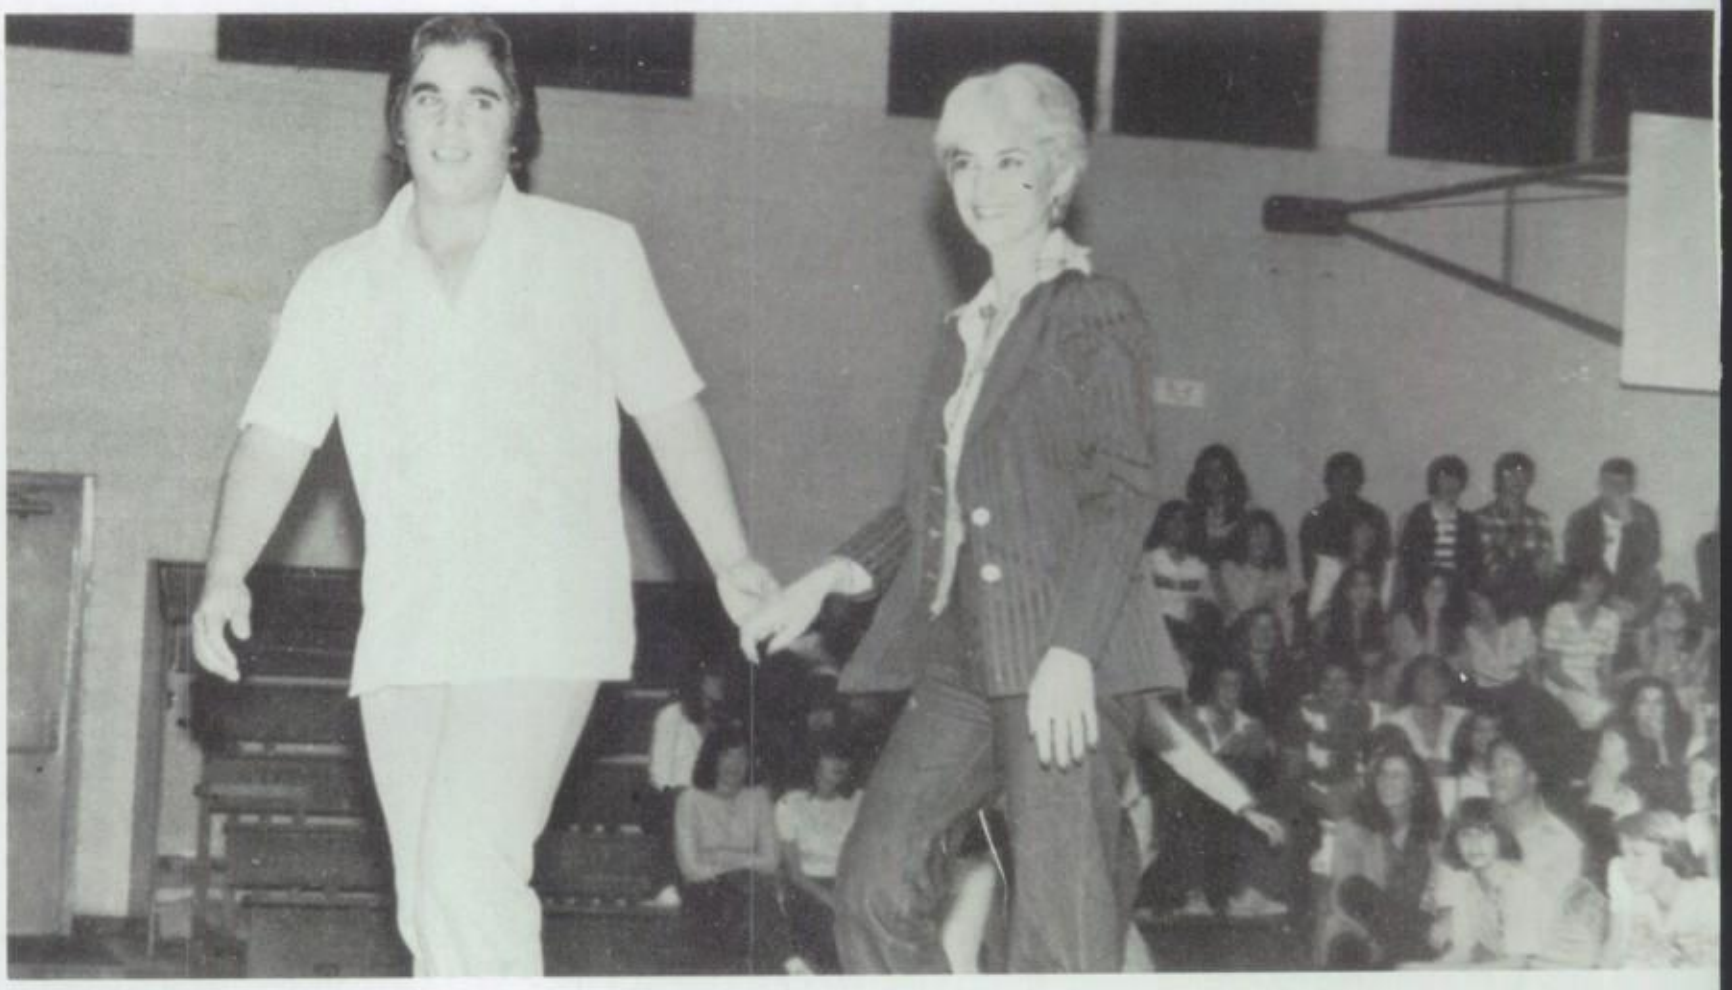
The overall attitude throughout the year was excellent, shown in the thoughtful, mature behavior during the celebrations.



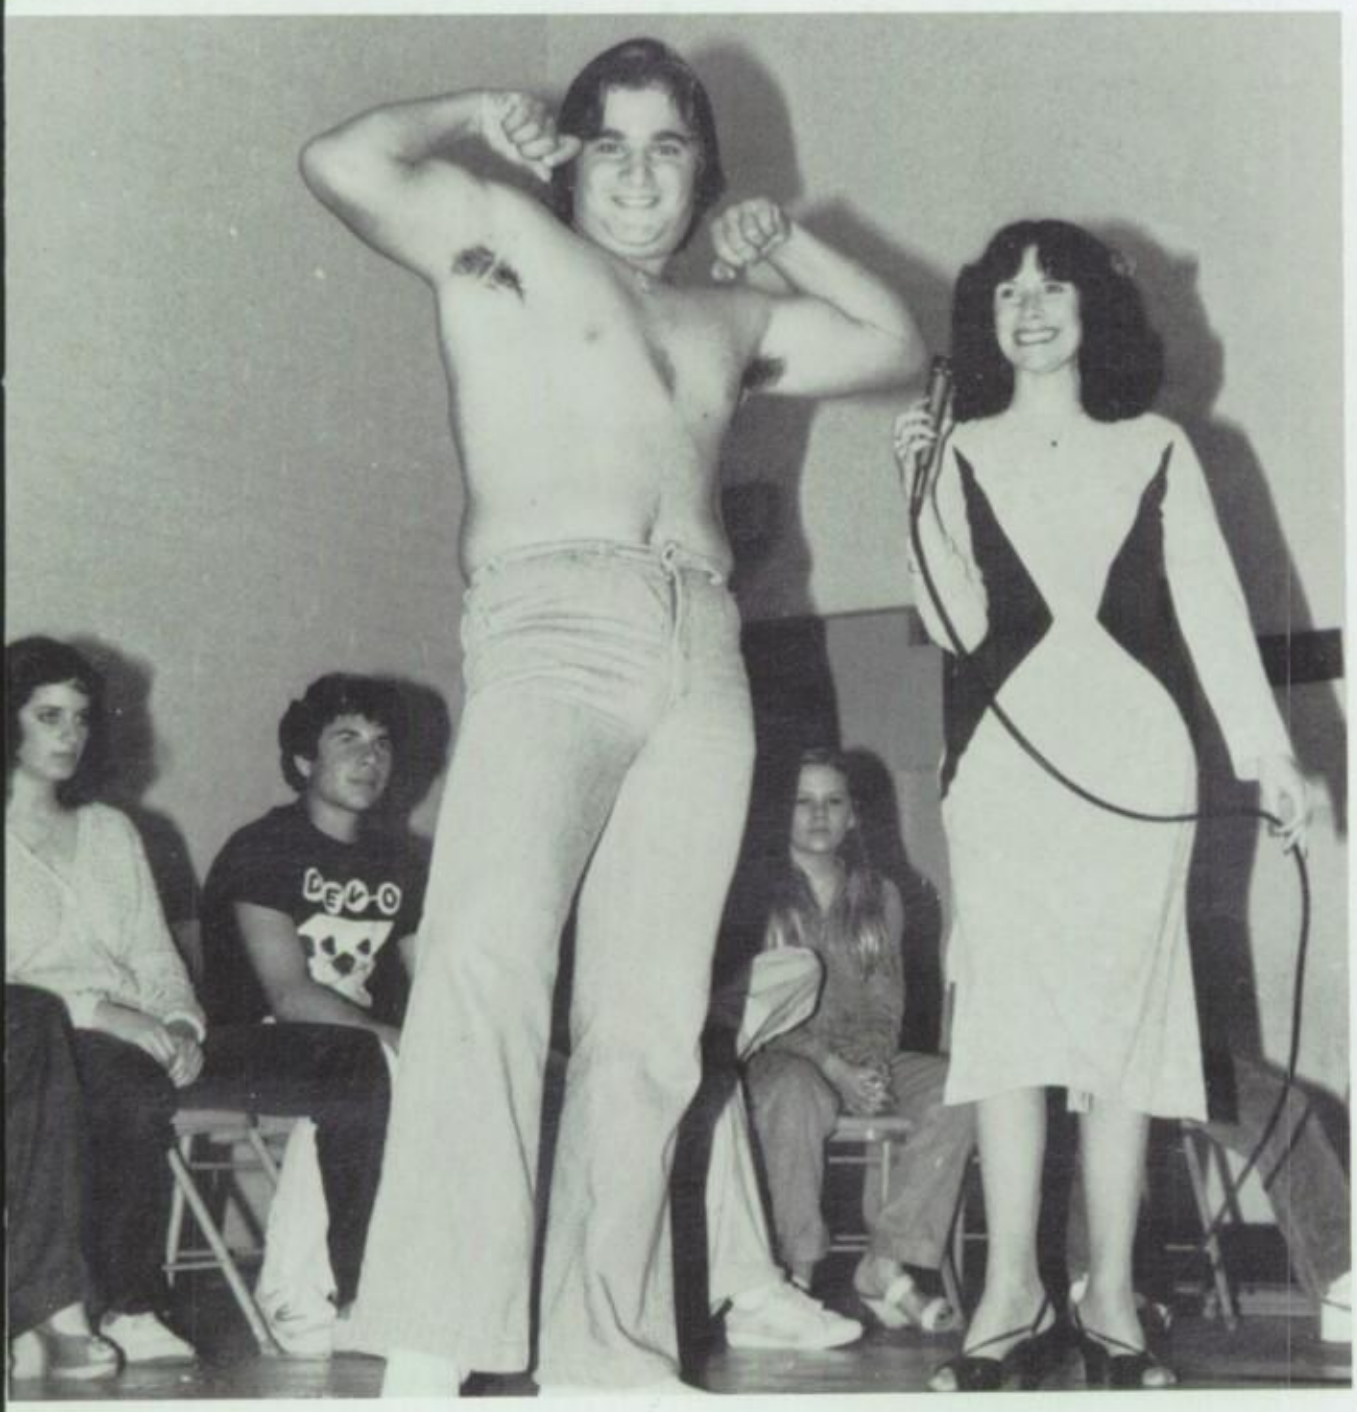
TO REFLECT AND UNIFY

Counter Clockwise From Above: Mr. Gorsich administers ash to begin the Lenten season; The folk group leads the students in song; Theron Baynard receives the Eucharist from Father Tassi; Father Dan Greisgraber, a Uni alumnus, blesses the host at the Homecoming Mass; Students and visiting priests listen attentively to Father Lanphier's sermon; Father Dillabough offers communion at the Ash Wednesday Mass; Tim Howe delivers the prayers of the faithful.

SHARP SHOW BOTH HYPNOTIZING



AND HILARIOUS



"You're a dancer . . . a singer . . . a child again . . . a sex symbol . . . Romeo and Juliet . . . Burt Reynolds . . ." We've all had these fantasies. One night in January, a dozen Uni students had a chance to live their fantasies — at least in their minds.

After explaining about the different types of extra-sensory perception, George and Joyce Sharp shocked the audience by guessing words that members mentally "transmitted" to them. Then the Sharps hypnotized about thirty volunteers from the audience, weeding out those who did not fall into the "subconscious state" until twelve were left. Spectators howled when Steve Levy leapt across the stage as "Rad Surfer", and as David Jannone took a motorcycle trip. Everyone got a chance to get into the act when the subjects found their favorite celebrity in the audience or taught their friends how to square dance and play "ring-around-the-Rosie."

Most students agreed that the Sharp Show was just as entertaining as past hypnotist shows, and was much more educational.

FASHION CRUISE DOCKS

Gliding down the runway, the model stopped to turn and smile at her friends and parents in the audience. They had come to enjoy "Fashion Cruise '81", the annual fashion show presented by Uni's clothing classes, and they were not disappointed.

Talented students from Mrs. Estelle Kassebaum and Mrs. Pat Prather's sewing classes modeled garments they created, everything from swimwear for the sunny beaches of Puerto Vallarta to evening wear appropriate for dinner at the Captain's table. Custom made wet suits and ski wear were big hits.

One of the most impressive things about the show was the number of men that sewed their own three-piece suits or sports jackets. Highly professional technique was shown even by beginning students, and more advanced workers demonstrated great originality in modifying patterns with their own ideas.

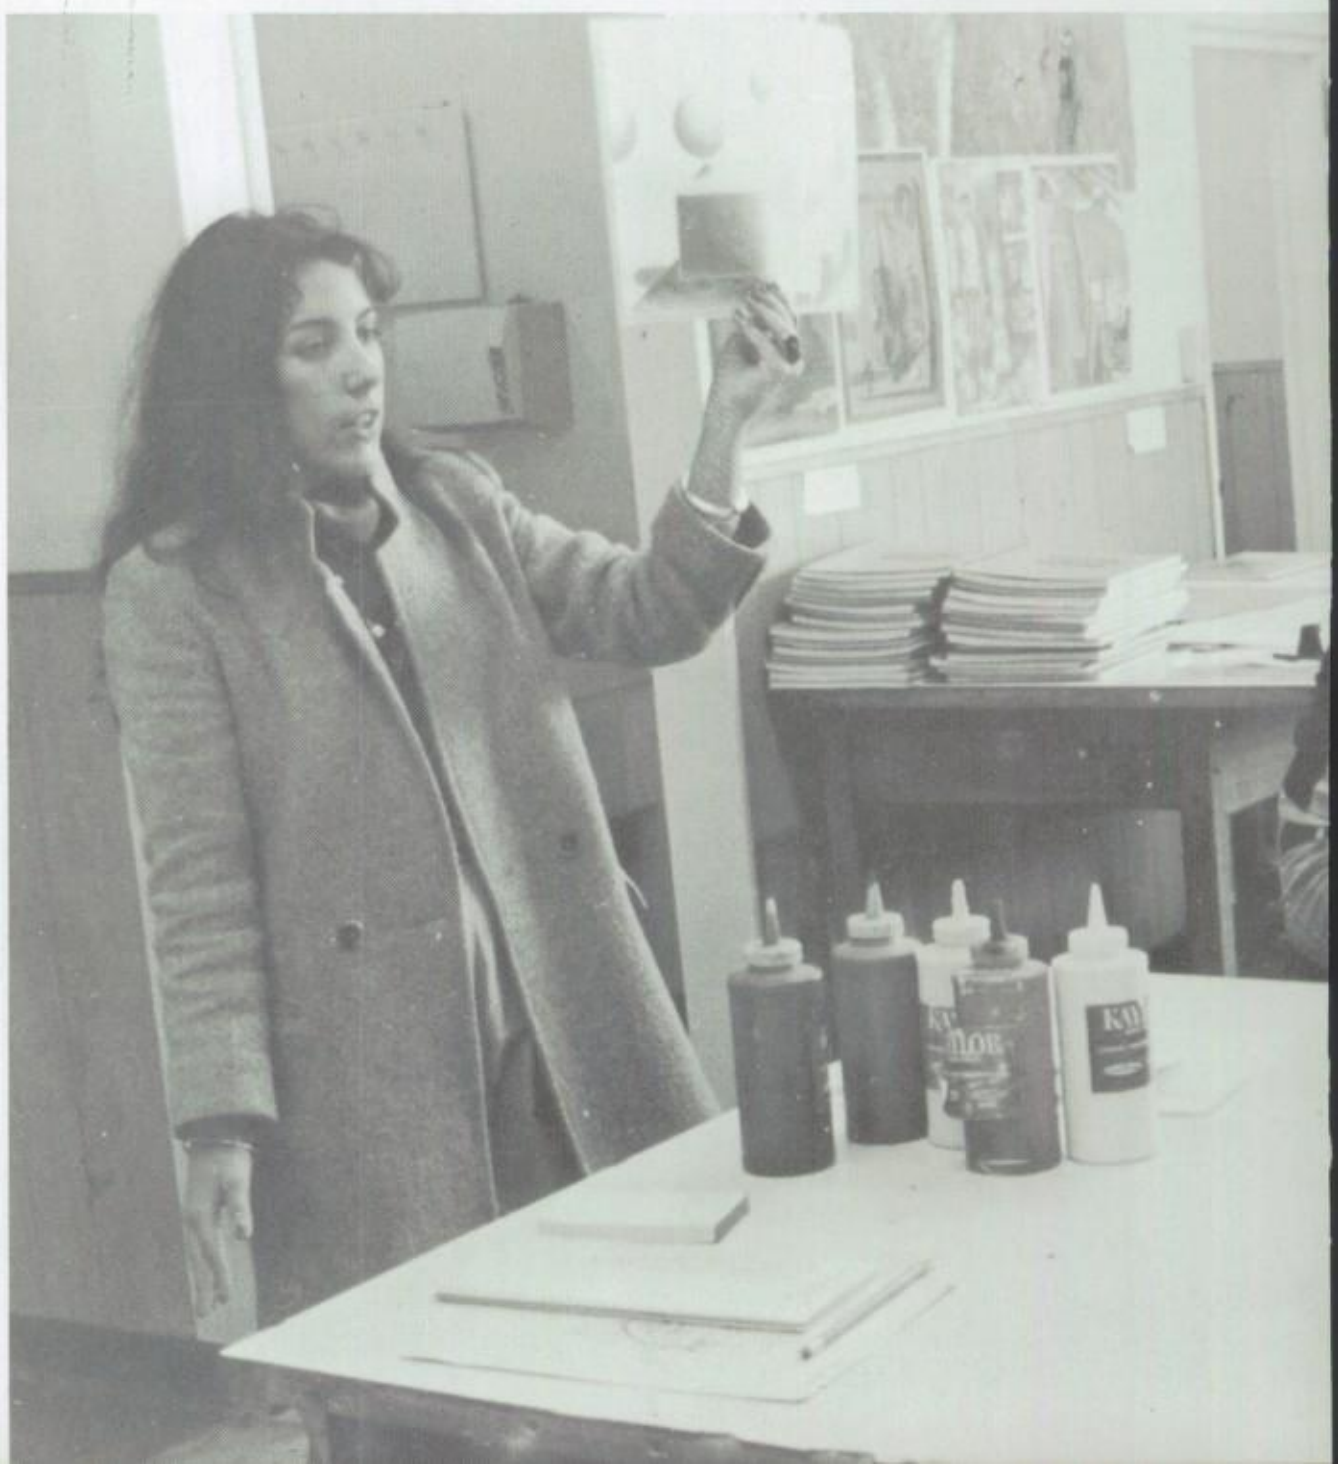
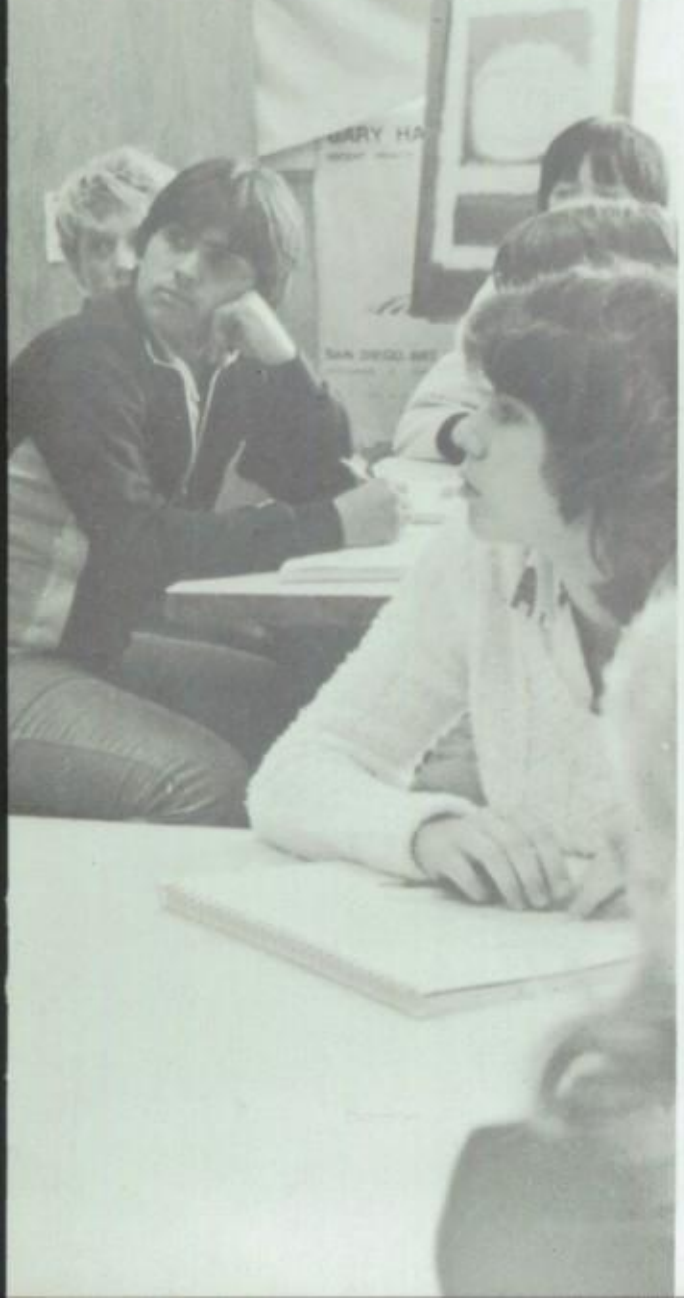
AT UNIVERSITY

The Student Art Exhibit opened for a week-long run in the C.C. Center on January 19 featuring the work of many talented arts and crafts students. Included in the display were pen and ink drawings, air brush creations, silk screen designs, and wood crafts from the first semester classes of Miss Rosa and Mr. A. Those who dropped in to view the show were impressed by the quality of the art works on exhibit, and looked forward to seeing the creations of second semester art students at the show in June.



SKILL AND FLAIR HIGHLIGHT ART SHOW



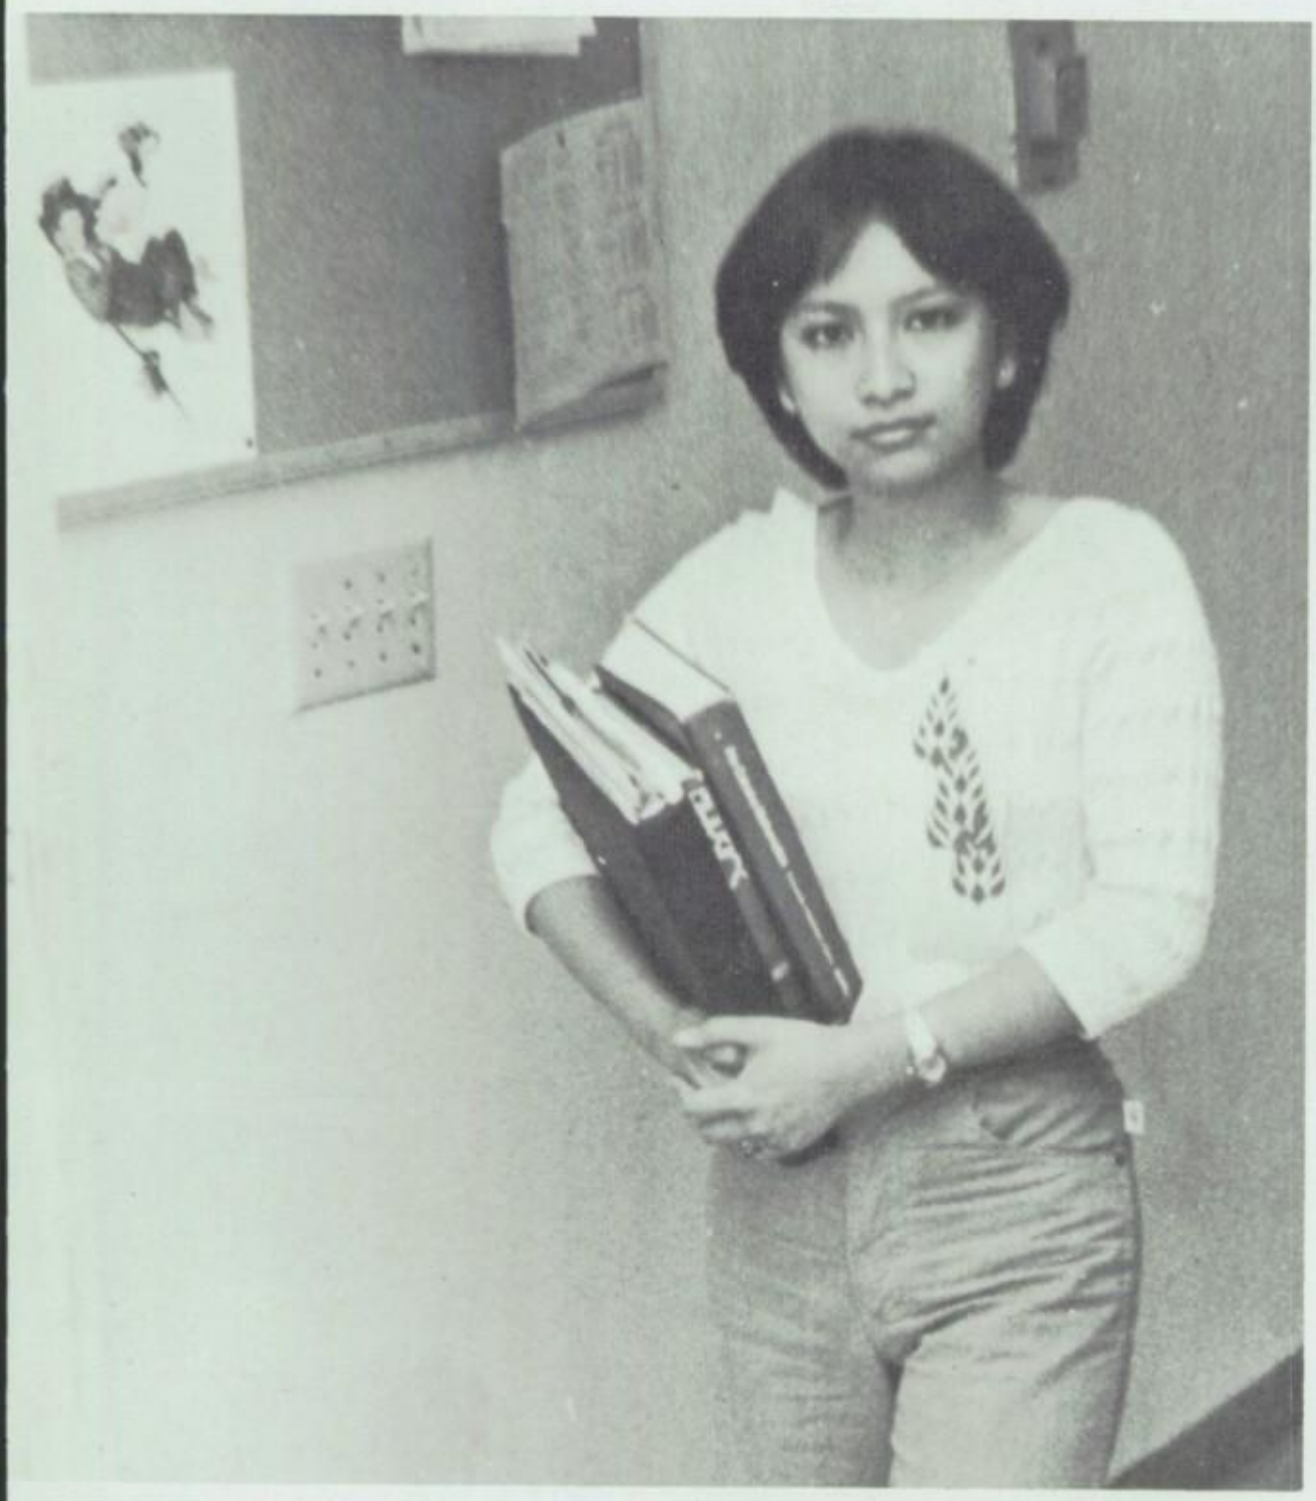
BISHOP GIVES RING MASS NEW TWIST

"Will you turn my ring? That makes fifty; I only need thirty-two more." The tradition that good luck accompanies a class ring being turned the number of one's graduation year was thus observed by the class of '82.

On December 15, 1980, in the Immaculata, about 150 juniors participated in another tradition, the Junior Ring Mass. The celebration was special this year because the rings arrived on the day of the mass, and for the first time, Bishop Leo T. Maher blessed them himself.

The theme for the Ring Mass, "Love is the Answer," was reflected in the Bishop's homily and in the choice of songs. Uni's Show Chorus and a folk group specially organized for the mass provided the music. After the mass, the senior class gave the juniors a reception in University's Catechetical Center.

BALDICER INTRIGUING PREVIEW TO H.A.W.



A week before Hunger Awareness Week, signs reading "Who is Baldicer?" and "We need Baldicer" began to appear all over campus. Some students sported green armbands and when asked why, they would smile and reply, "I work for Baldicer." Finally, on February 20, a sign shouting "Baldicer is Here" appeared by the library. It turned out that Baldicer stood for BALanced DIet CERtificates and was actually a game. But Baldicer was only a preview of "Harvest of Hope" a Hunger Awareness program to begin next week.

"Hunger can be eliminated if we take action" was the theme of the week. HAW was an educational experiment in interdisciplinary learning organized by Mrs. Adrienne Doyle. Its purpose was to awaken student interest in a very urgent social issue — world hunger. Teachers had the option of whether or not to cover the hunger issue in class; most teachers devoted part of class time to the issue. The Foreign Language classes talked about the hunger issue in foreign countries; how nutrition affected both the mind and behavior was discussed in Psychology; in English class, novels and short stories relating to hunger were read; in fact all the teachers managed to relate to the subjects they taught.

HUNGER AWARENESS WEEK OFFERS HOPE, SOLUTIONS

On Thursday, we had a special schedule. Three distinguished speakers discussed hunger in a morning symposium. Reverend Thomas Pettepiece gave the keynote address about responsibility and reasons for hope. Dr. Paul Saltman talked about nutrition, and Dr. Robert Livingston discussed how malnutrition related to the mind. The symposium was followed by two seminars which the students selected and the showing of the film "Grapes of Wrath." Several speakers, including Mrs. Estelle Kassebaum, discussed the changes we could make in our lifestyle in order to conserve resources. Doug Curley, a local newsman, lectured on the effect of the media on the hunger issue. San Diego Supervisor Jim Bates and Mrs. Betty McIntosh talked about hunger in San Diego. Other representatives from local organizations discussed their roles in attempting to deal with world hunger.

HAW took three months of planning which included approval by the school, recruiting of speakers, scheduling of events, and many other arrangements. "There are many times when it felt discouraging. But however much it cost in time, effort, and dollars, if it changed even one person's mind about hunger, it was worth it," remarked Mrs. Doyle. During the week, students reacted to the films and class discussions on hunger. Many took action by participating in the Youth for Youth Walk which raised money for the poor. HAW was a success indeed!

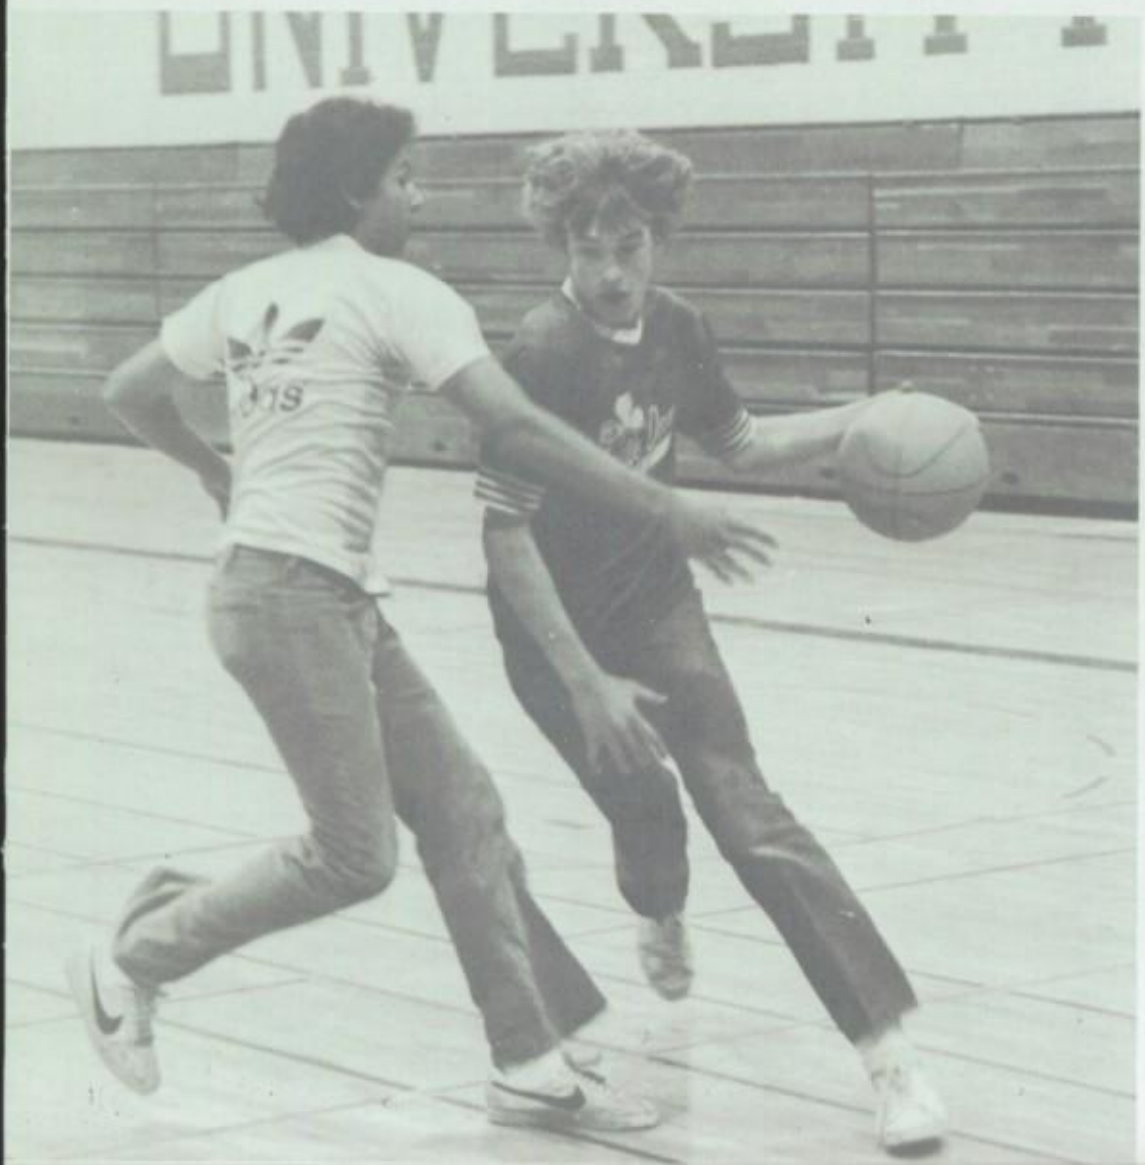
INTRAMURALS CHALLENGE LUNCHTIME ATHLETES

Because of the great organization of Intramurals Coordinator John Dolan, the student body spent their lunchtimes not only eating but also participating in athletics.

In October, ping-pong tables were assembled in the hall by the 50's for avid ping-pong players and fans. Out of the fifty competitors, Matt Cohn won first place while Mark Sperrazzo took second. Matt and his brother, Mike, won the doubles for the past three years; this is Matt's first time as singles champ.

In December, 28 teams (6 players per team) participated in the lunchtime volleyball matches.

In the 2-on-2 basketball intramurals, the Reyes-Thistle team dribbled its way to victory over a field of twenty-one other teams.



Clockwise From Left: George Beltran tries to stop Dave Thistle's scoring drive; Dave Thistle, in turn, will go to any lengths to keep George from the score; ping-pong champ Matt Cohn is so confidents that he doesn't even stop for lunch; Xavier Porlas shoots for two points; this lunchtime sportman is determined to win.

COMPETITION MARKS POWDER PUFF CONTESTS

Throughout the history of Uni's intramurals, there has never been a display of class competition and spirit to rival this year's powder puff football tournament.

The first game pitted the sophomores against the freshmen. The sophomores, coached by Mr. Zoll and Mr. Marcus, defeated the frosh in a close 7-6 game. The freshmen, coached by Mr. Jacobacci, displayed much effort and spirit but couldn't overcome the speed of the sophomores.

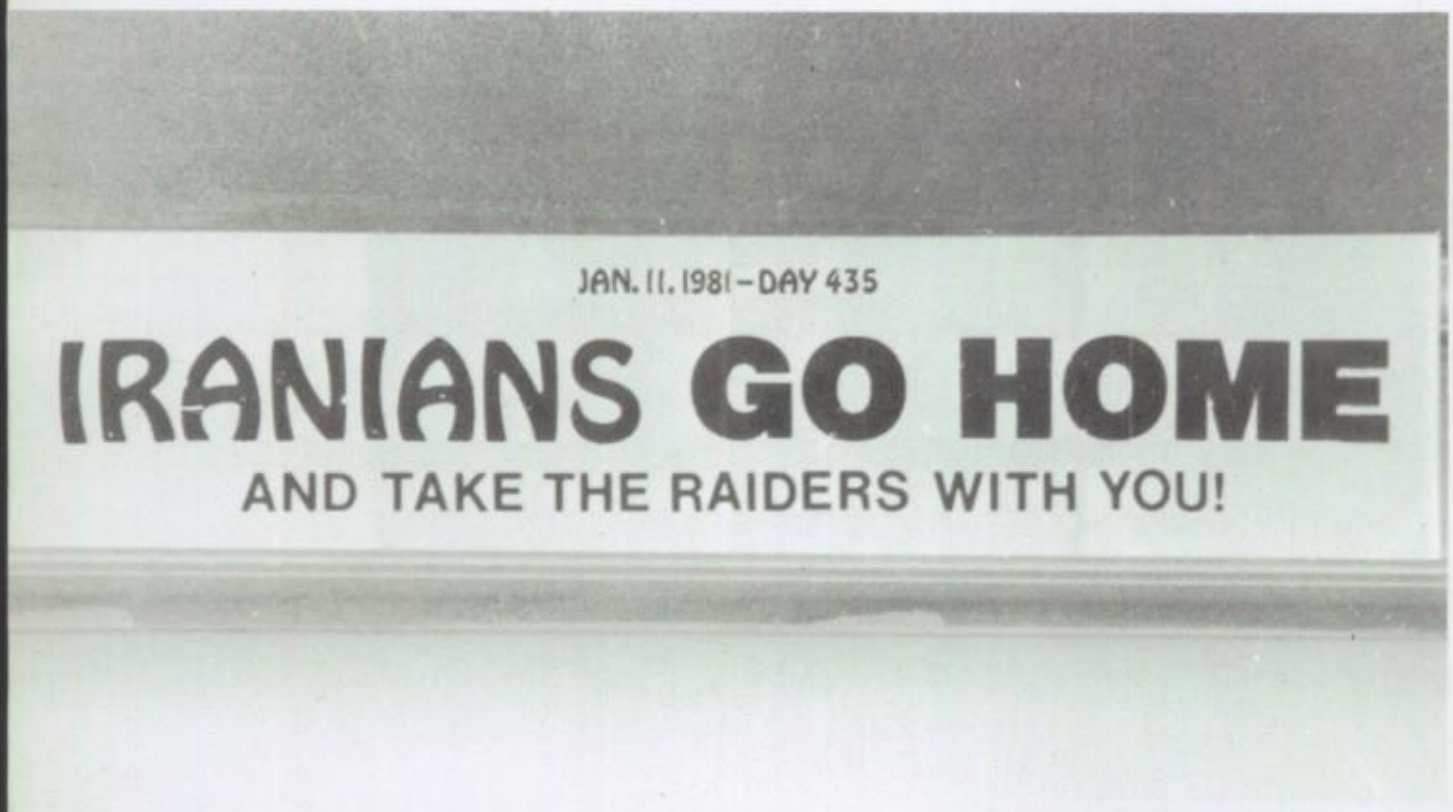
The second game was a head-on clash between the juniors and seniors. In this game, no points were scored; the winner of the game was the team which had gained the most yardage, the seniors. It was a bitter loss suffered by the juniors and Coach Rubidoux, but they walked away with an undying spirit, repeating to themselves, "Just wait till next year!"

The third game was the big Puff Bowl. The sophomores headed on to the field with the confidence of their running and passing game backing them up. The seniors felt confident of their speed on offense as well as their outstanding defensive line. The rivalry was fierce, the teams ready for each other, and the excited fans screaming for blood. The sophomores took a 12 point lead in the first half, and after halftime the seniors attempted a rally but scored only six points. So the score remained 12-6; the triumphant sophomores received a shining trophy as their reward for a game well played.

NOW, A WORD FROM OUR SPONSORS

Clockwise from left opposite page: "Kiss me! I've got the 'Signal.'"; See no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil — do no evil?; "I dare ya to call it regular. I dare ya!"; Judy's a Pepper. Wouldn't you like to be a Pepper, too?; "Why do you think they call it 'Close-up'?"; "Now he's a Herman Joseph!"; "I'm wearing Slenderalls!"

AND THAT'S THE WAY IT WAS . . .



Our days were filled with essays and problems and labs. We shared secrets, and fun, got involved at school. But we also never forgot that the world was going on its way right outside our door. Triumphs and tragedies, good news and bad; we felt and experienced them all.

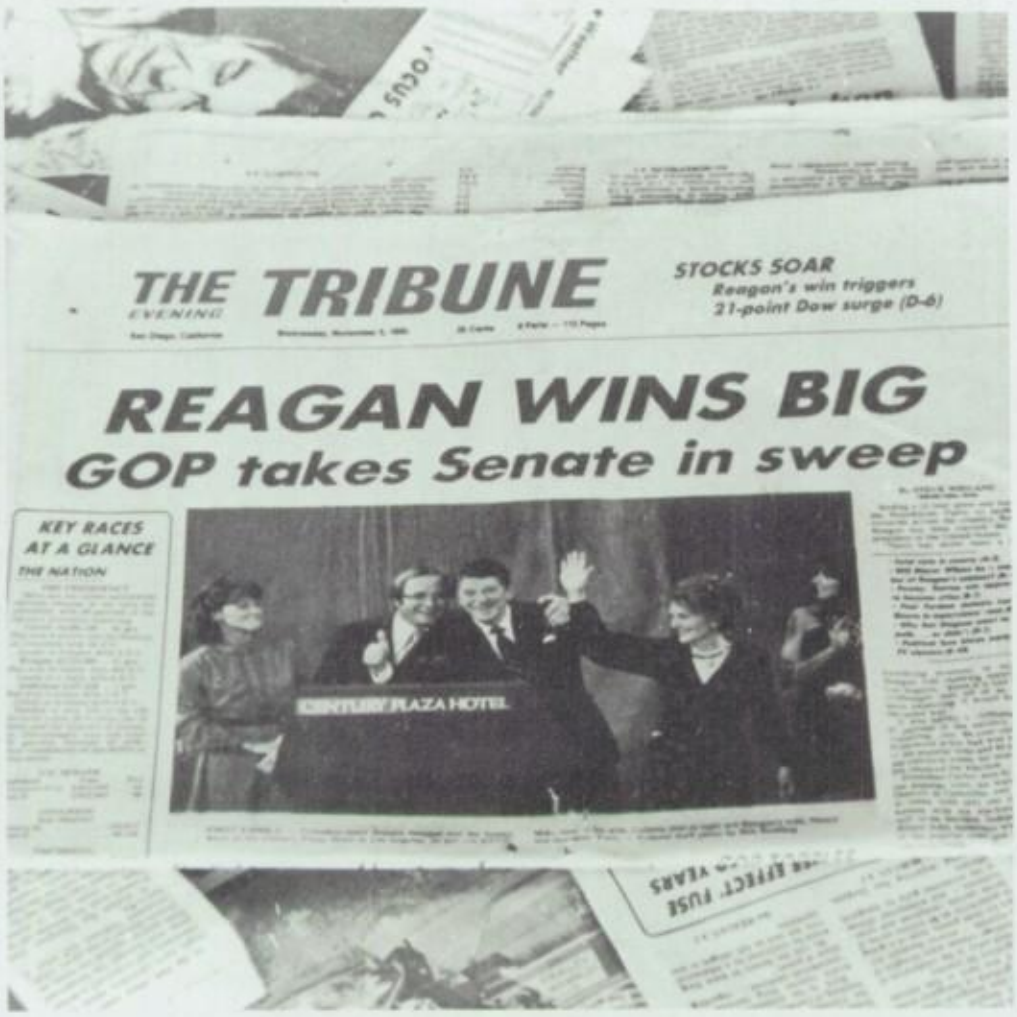
The 52 hostages' ordeal continued as the first bell called September classes to order. Blaring headlines raised and dashed our hopes; the second Christmas came and went and still no release. Finally, on January 20, the Iranians ended the 444 day captivity. San Diego welcomed back Richard Morefield. Ticker-tape fluttered and suddenly yellow ribbons were everywhere.

On that same day, Ronald Reagan became our 40th President and the country took a turn to the right. He'd defeated an exhausted Carter the November before; Independent John Anderson paved the way for future third party candidates.

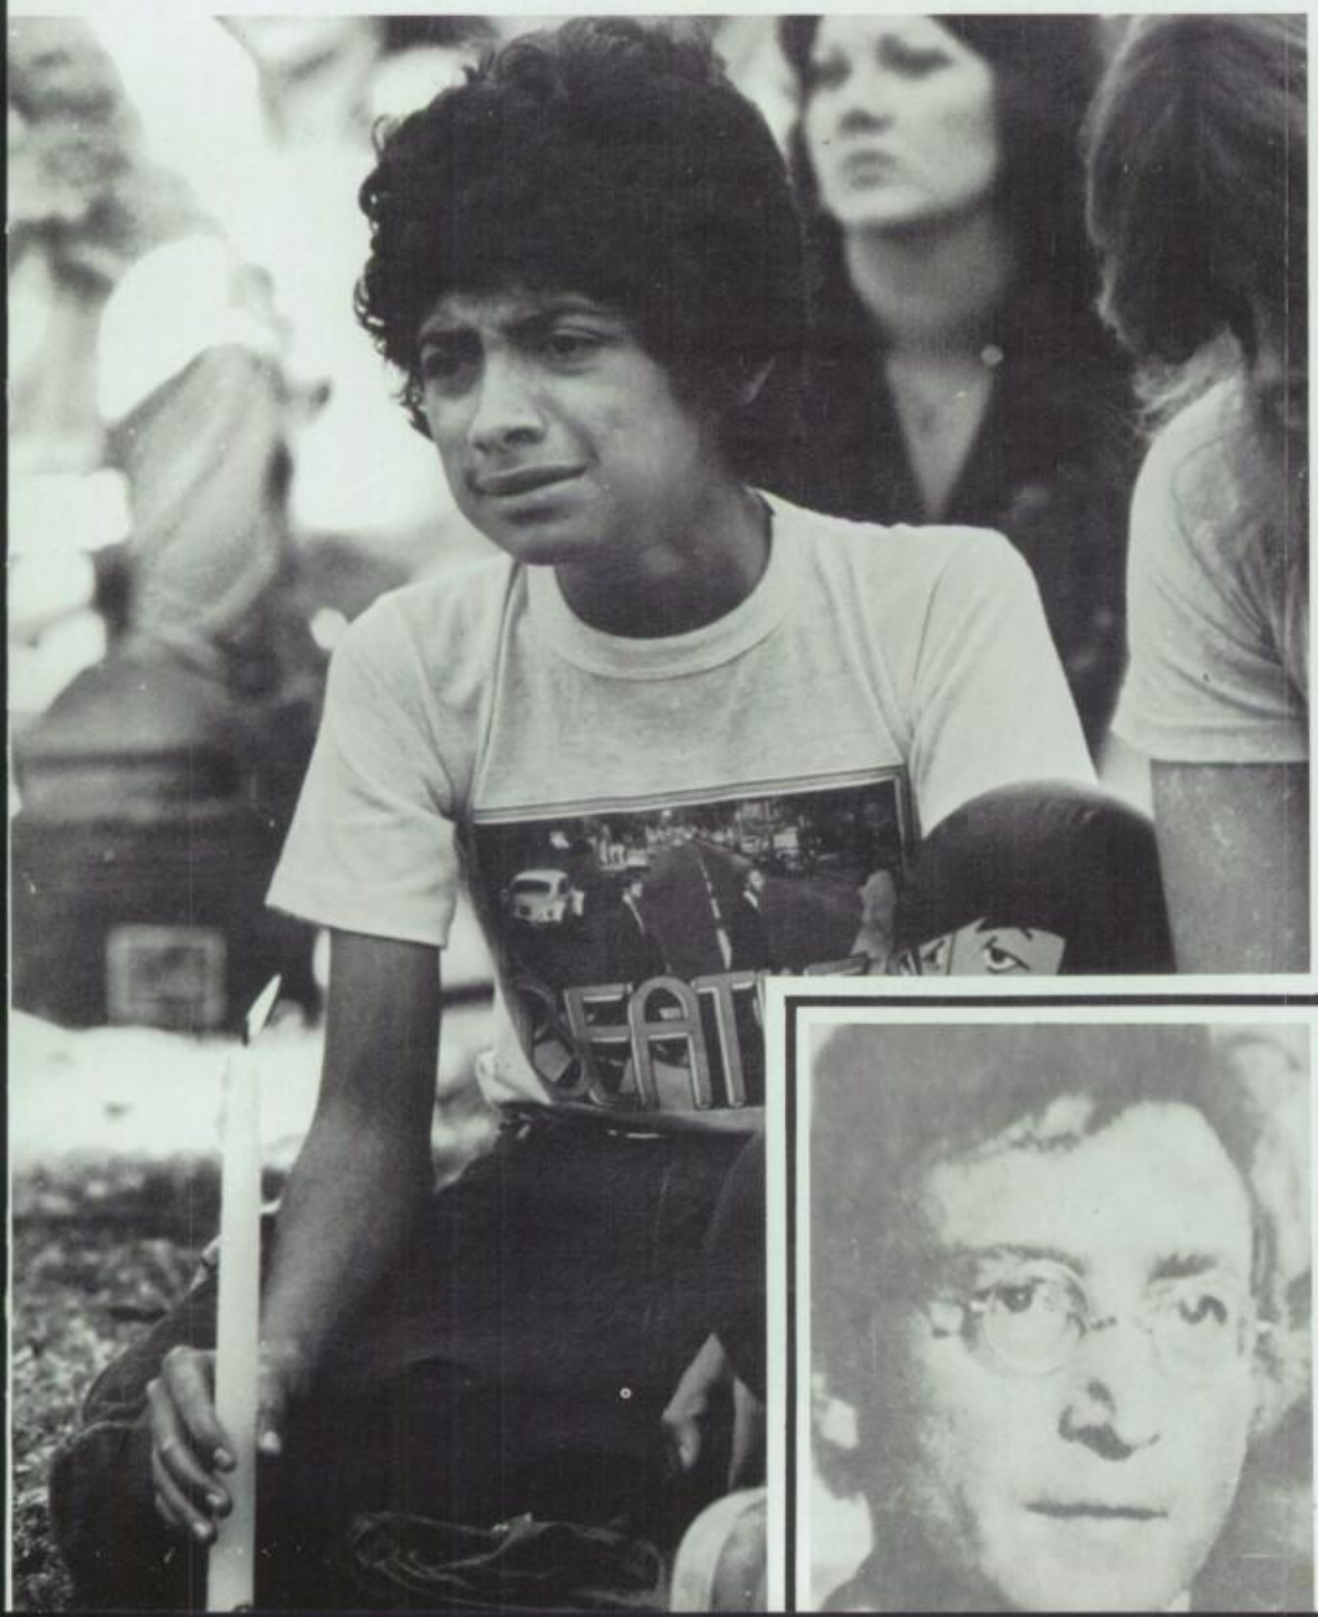
Music fans the world over mourned John Lennon's assassination outside his New York apartment. Some sported black armbands and more than a few Uni students attended memorial services in Balboa Park.

San Diego football fans thrilled as the Charger's bid for their first Super Bowl escalated into a reality. They progressed through the play-offs and finally faced the detested Oakland Raiders. Fans hissed as they lost.

Recession hit hard everywhere. Gas soared to $1.50 per gallon in many places, food cost more, even textbook prices reflected the double digit inflation. On a lighter side, John Travolta's "Urban Cowboy" spawned a Western wear craze and purple was the color of the year. Tweed, sweaters and Sperry Topsiders were big as the "Preppy Look" soared in populaty.



Clockwise From Below: Camille Selis is all decked out in Western wear; gas prices soared; At the services in Balboa Park, Nick Peters mourned the death of former Beatle John Lennon; the politically minded aired their views, too; Iranians and Raider fans found a place in our hearts; the hostage crisis kept us occupied; Reagan became our 40th President.



To and from . . . far and wide . . .
Rushing in the morning out to school
And in the afternoon for home . . .
Not everyone had their own car for transportation.
Some rode the crowded buses with the People pushing and shoving to find seats.
Others walked; still others rode in carpools, which if you Recall, were the cause of some congestion in
The Senior parking lot. There were many near-
Accidents involving punctual parents,
and smashing Seniors,
The brave bikers, and the poor pedestrians from USD pool, that Impaired the dirt bank from the lot down
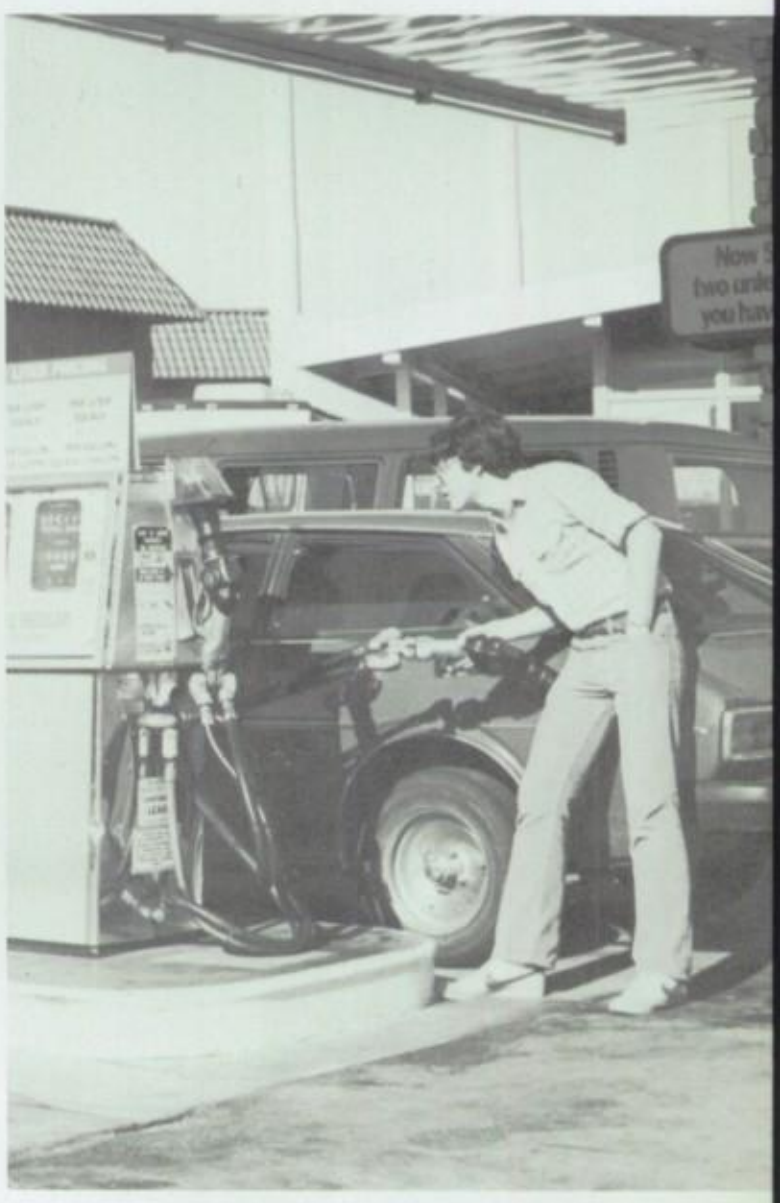
Onto the sidewalk. However far,
whatever it took,
Nearly everyone had their special way
of "geting around."

AND ANOTHER ONE RIDES THE BUS . . .



Clockwise From Left: Hi, ho! Hi, ho! It's off to work we go!; "Pretty soon we'll need parking permits for our bikes!"; After being dropped off, students head up the hill; "Mom, I told you that if you put the station wagon in the dryer, it would shrink"; "Let's see, 3.785 liters equal one gallon, and thats 52 liters, so . . ."

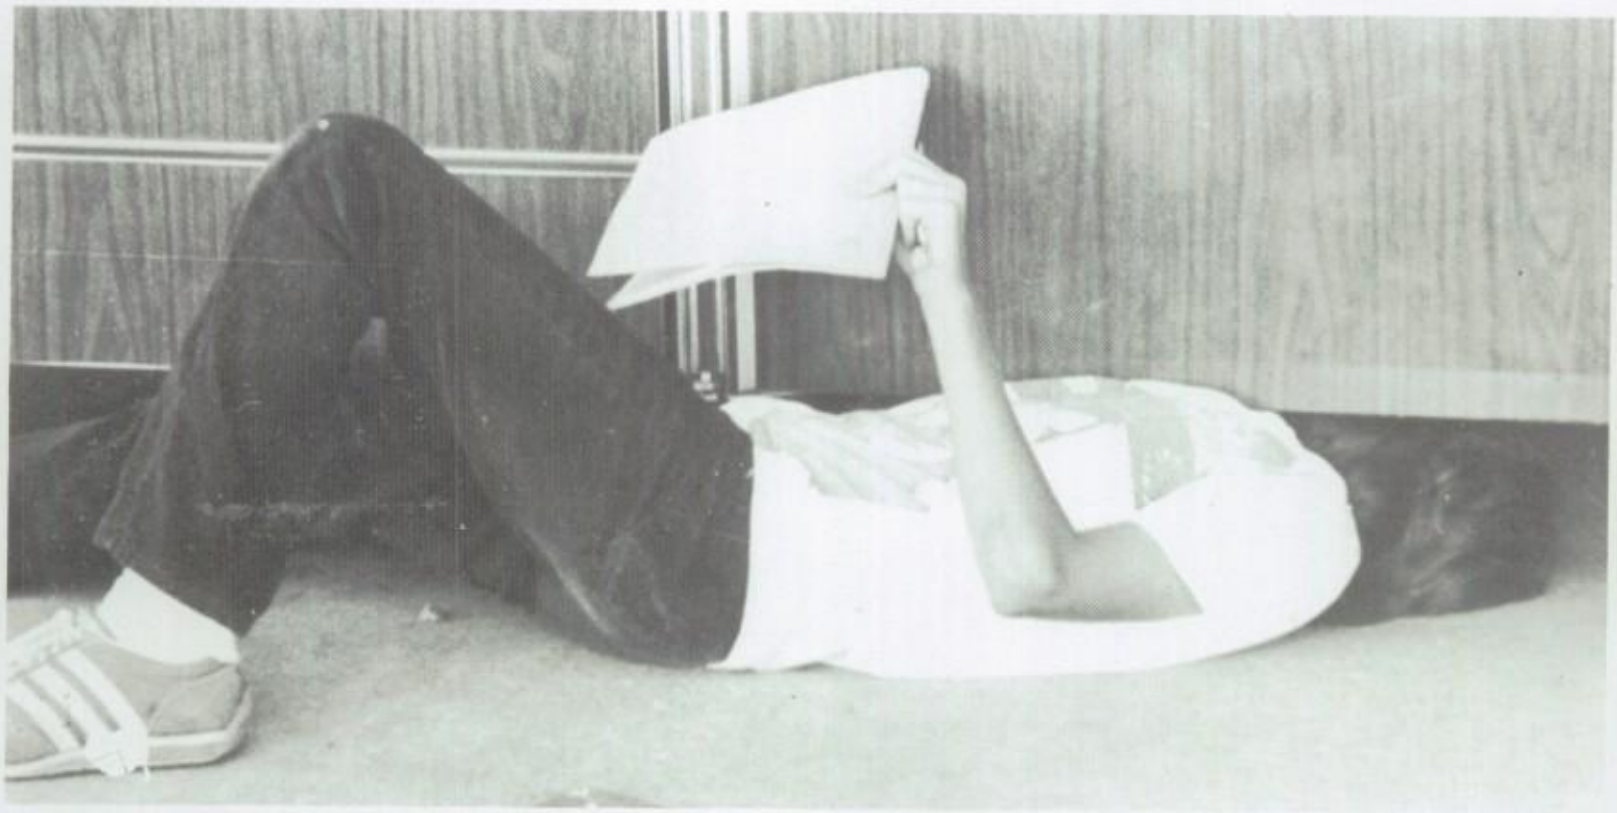
It's five minutes before the lunch bell. Yor stomach grumbles and you shift anxiously in your chair. As you watch the seconds go by, you realize that these are the longest five minutes of the day. Fellow students are taking their money out, counting to see if they have enough for the machines. You imagine your lunch sitting in your locker, waiting to be eaten. You sigh as you remember that you ate half of it during break.

At last the bell rings! You observe other people as they rush out of the buildings like popcorn from a popper. Music from the ASB Office begins to fill the air. Hordes of people rush to the machines, dropping coins along the way and taking cuts to buy junk food at exorbitant prices. You run off to "the spot" where you always eat lunch and meet with friends. Others take off to the library to work on last night's homework which is due in the next class. You just sit back and relax — lunch is the best time of the day.

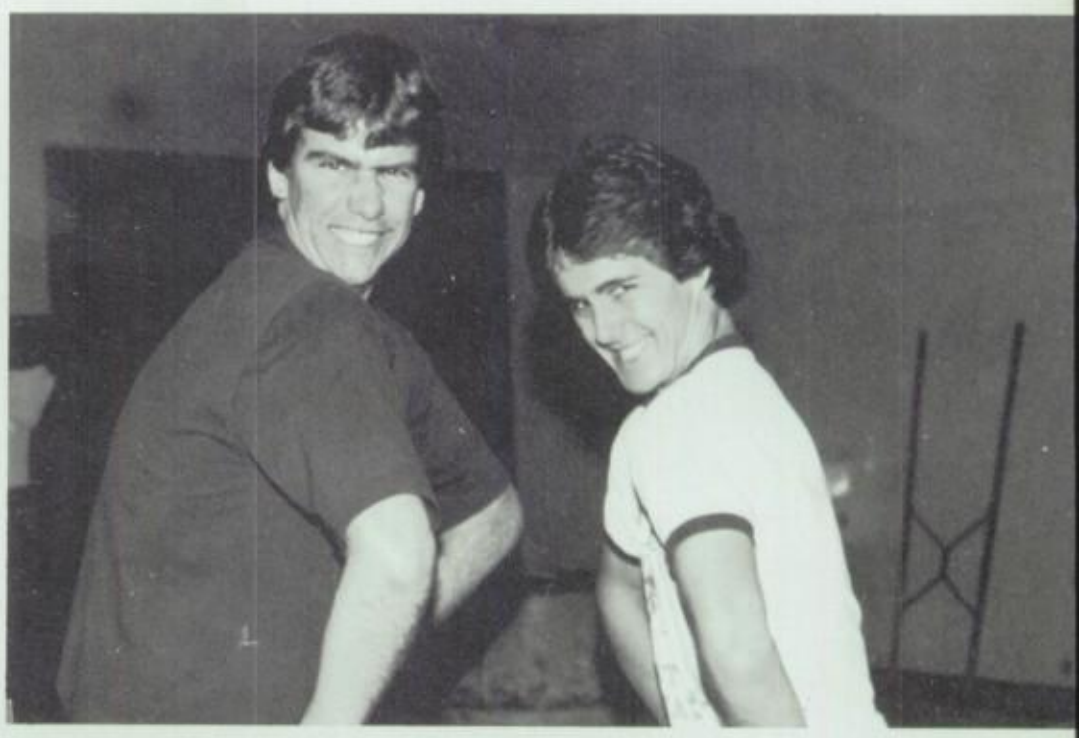
LUNCH IS TIME TO SHARE AND RELAX DURING HECTIC DAY

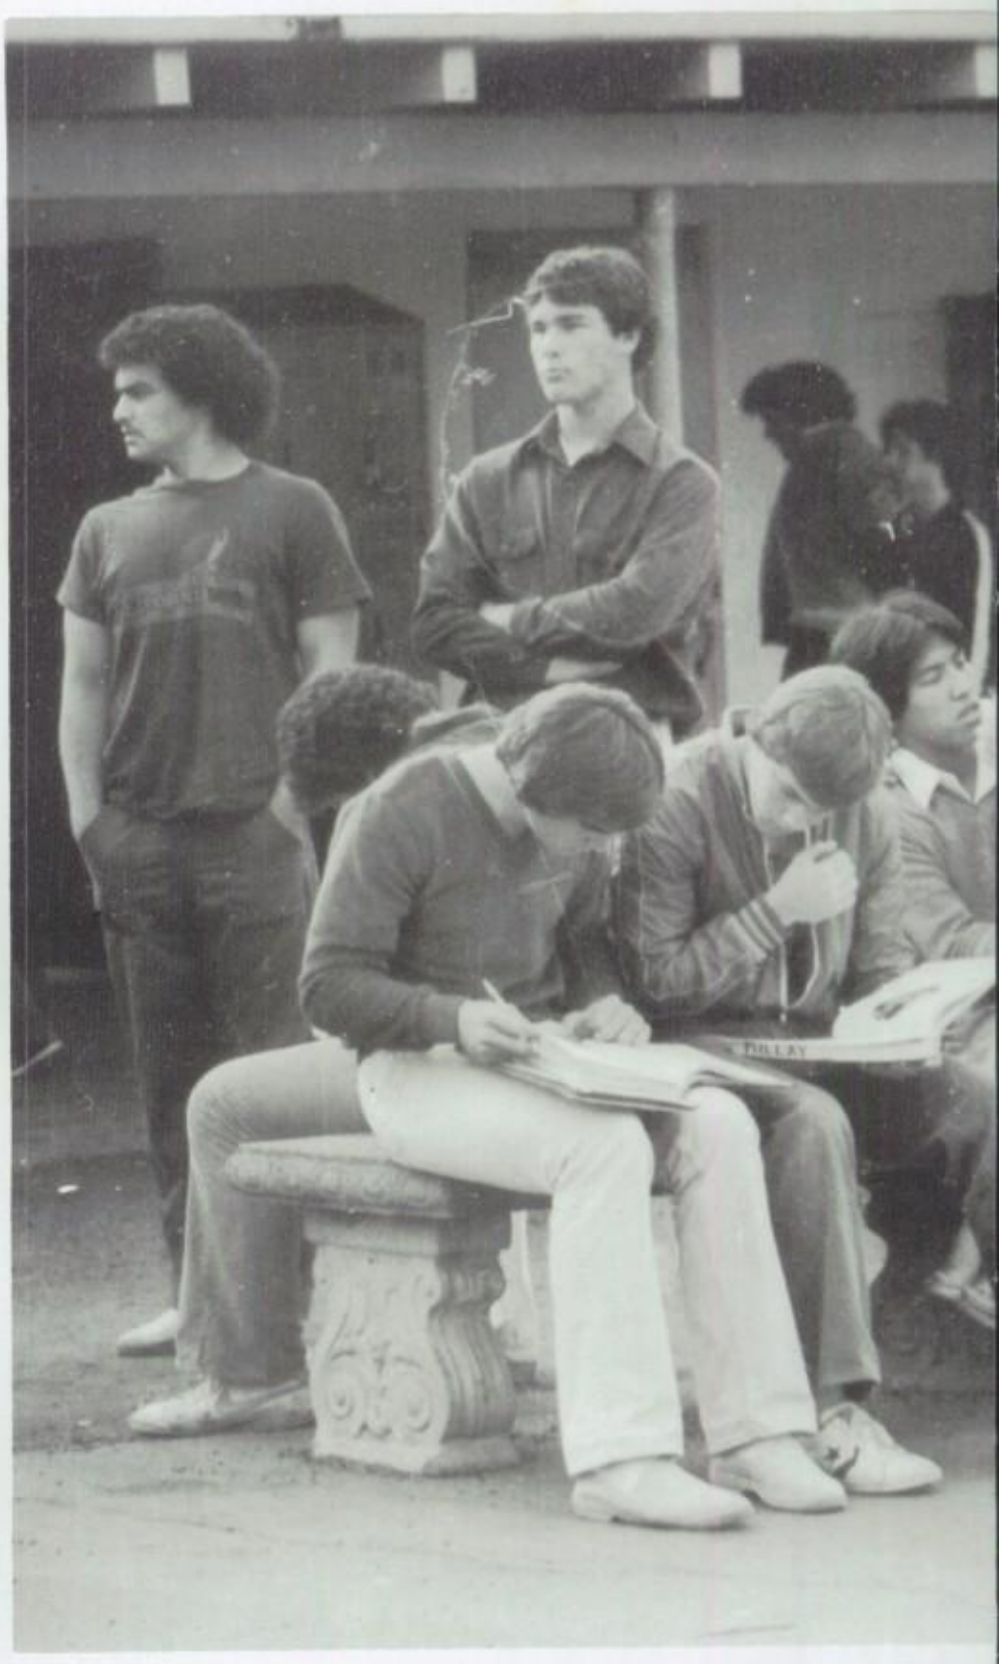
Clockwise From Top Left: The Moment of truth: Will she lose this quarter?; Machine Madness engulfs students each lunchtime; "I think she likes me!"; "Uh oh, here comes the principal!"; "What do they put in these hotdogs, anyway?."

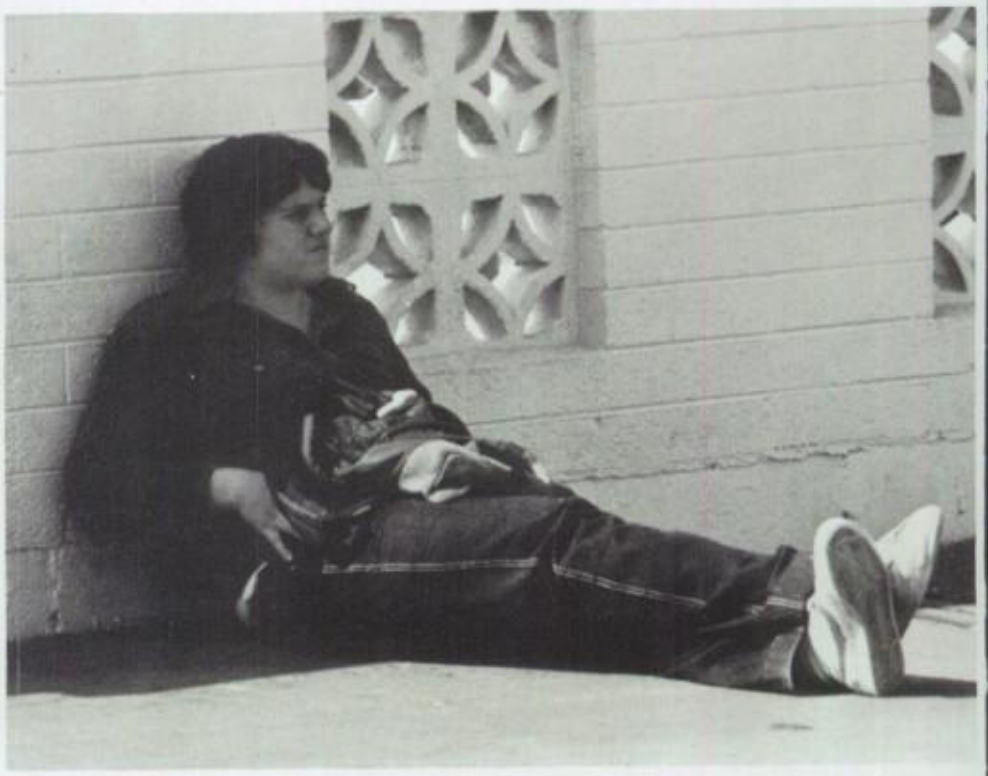
CAUGHT IN THE ACT



Clockwise From Above: "Lose your nickel, son?"; special friends; Bill Holman and Mike Smyth: Teenage Contortionists; "Hey baby, wanna boogie?"; The Dimple Kid; "Oh, c'mon, you monsters, I know you put it in here somewhere;" but, Mrs. Filipowski, you can't leave yet — it's only 3:29!







WHERE DO YOU HANG OUT?

"I'll be on the stairs." "Meet me at the wall." "Let's go to the library." "Who wants to go to the machines?" Whenever we wanted to find someone, we knew exactly where to look: where they hung out. Certain groups just seemed to gravitate to specific areas on campus.

In keeping with tradition, seniors ruled the stairs. Those of Italian and Portuguese descent met at the "Wop Wall," along with a few others. The most studious ended up in the library while those who liked quiet watched the Bay from the west wall.

The Machines were the favorite hangout for the terminally hungry and the wall by room 40 remained a popular spot for finishing up homework. One familiar group took the lawn by The Tree as their own and another tree in the courtyard was the property of Uni's Athletic Department.

But hangouts were most than just a place to be. As a place to enjoy free time and share with friends, they were an integral part of Uni life.

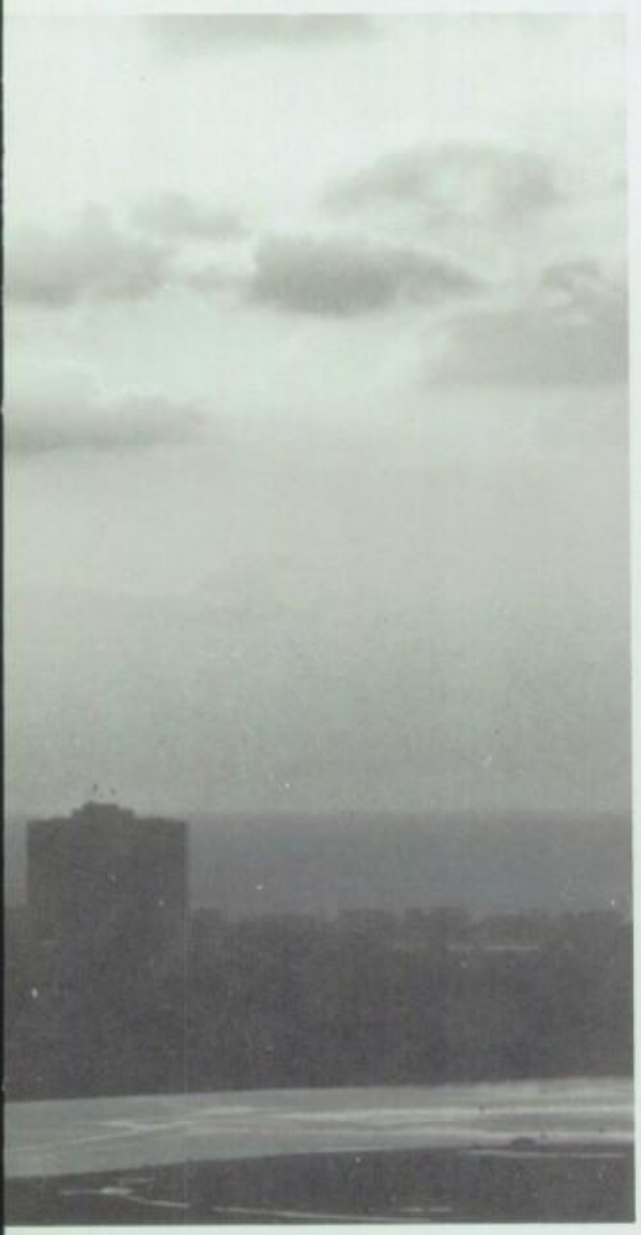
UNI BASKS IN SUN OF 'AMERICA'S

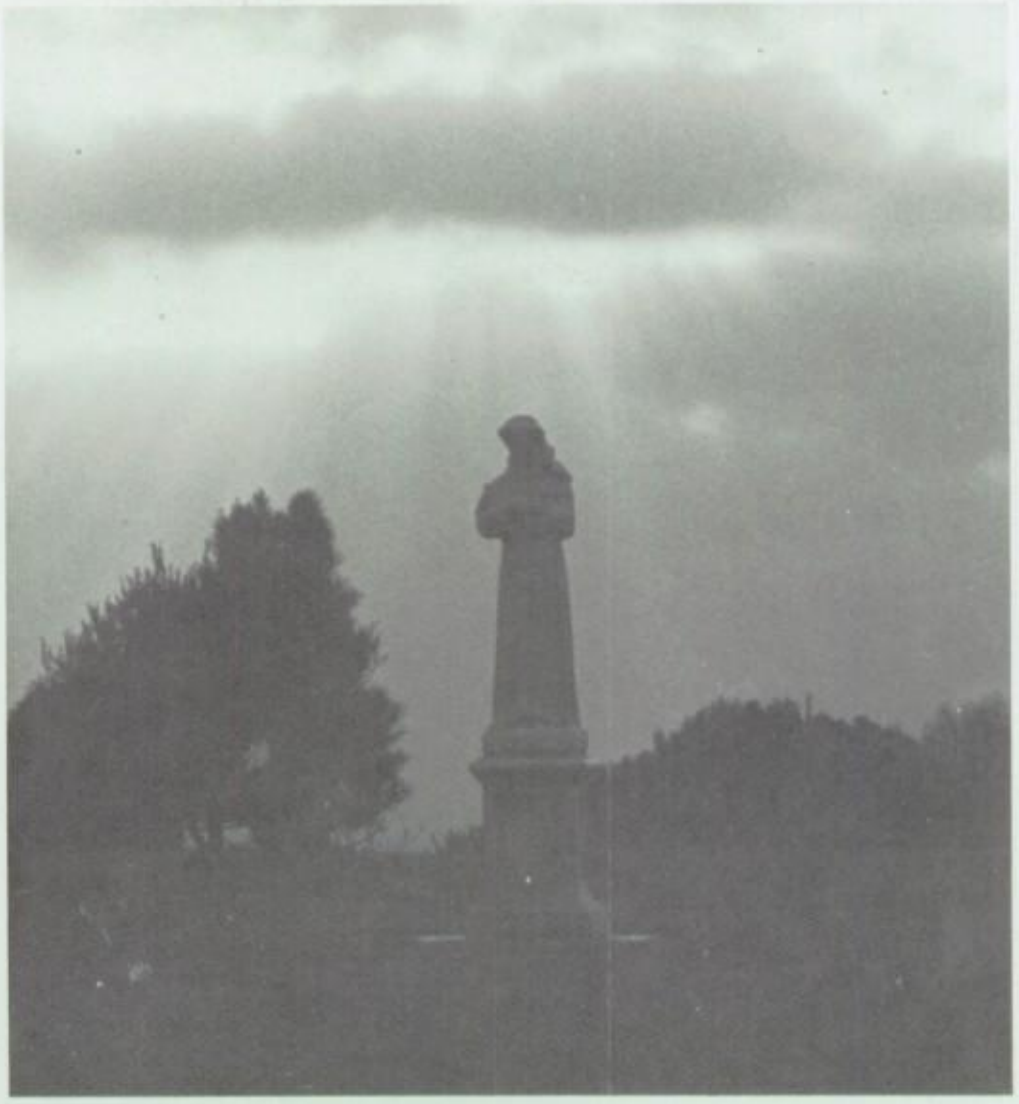
Balboa Park. The Zoo. Old Town. Mission Bay. Tijuana. The Coronado Bridge. The mountains. The desert. Fifty miles of the best beaches in the world. As citizens of America's "Finest City" we enjoyed all these and more, all no more than an hour away.

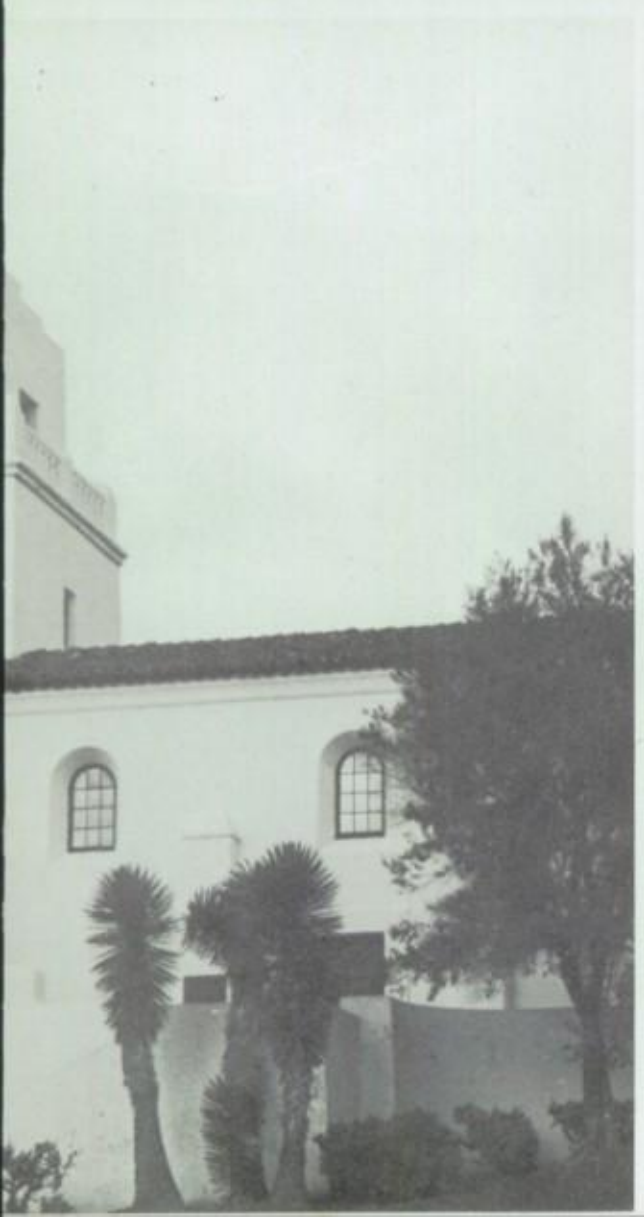
Uni students were especially lucky. Perched atop some of the finest real estate in San Diego, we could look out for miles around. To the west lay Mission Bay; many of us worked there at its world famous marine park, Sea World. Beyond, the ocean gleamed in the sun and the lights of Pt. Loma shone.

To the South, Mission Valley buzzed with activity. Not only tourists enjoyed its hundreds of restaurants and 2 huge shopping centers. Just across the street, the University of San Diego's blue dome glinted brightly. As well as several community colleges, Uni graduates could choose between huge San Diego State or the highly respected UC San Diego without even leaving town.

FINEST CITY'







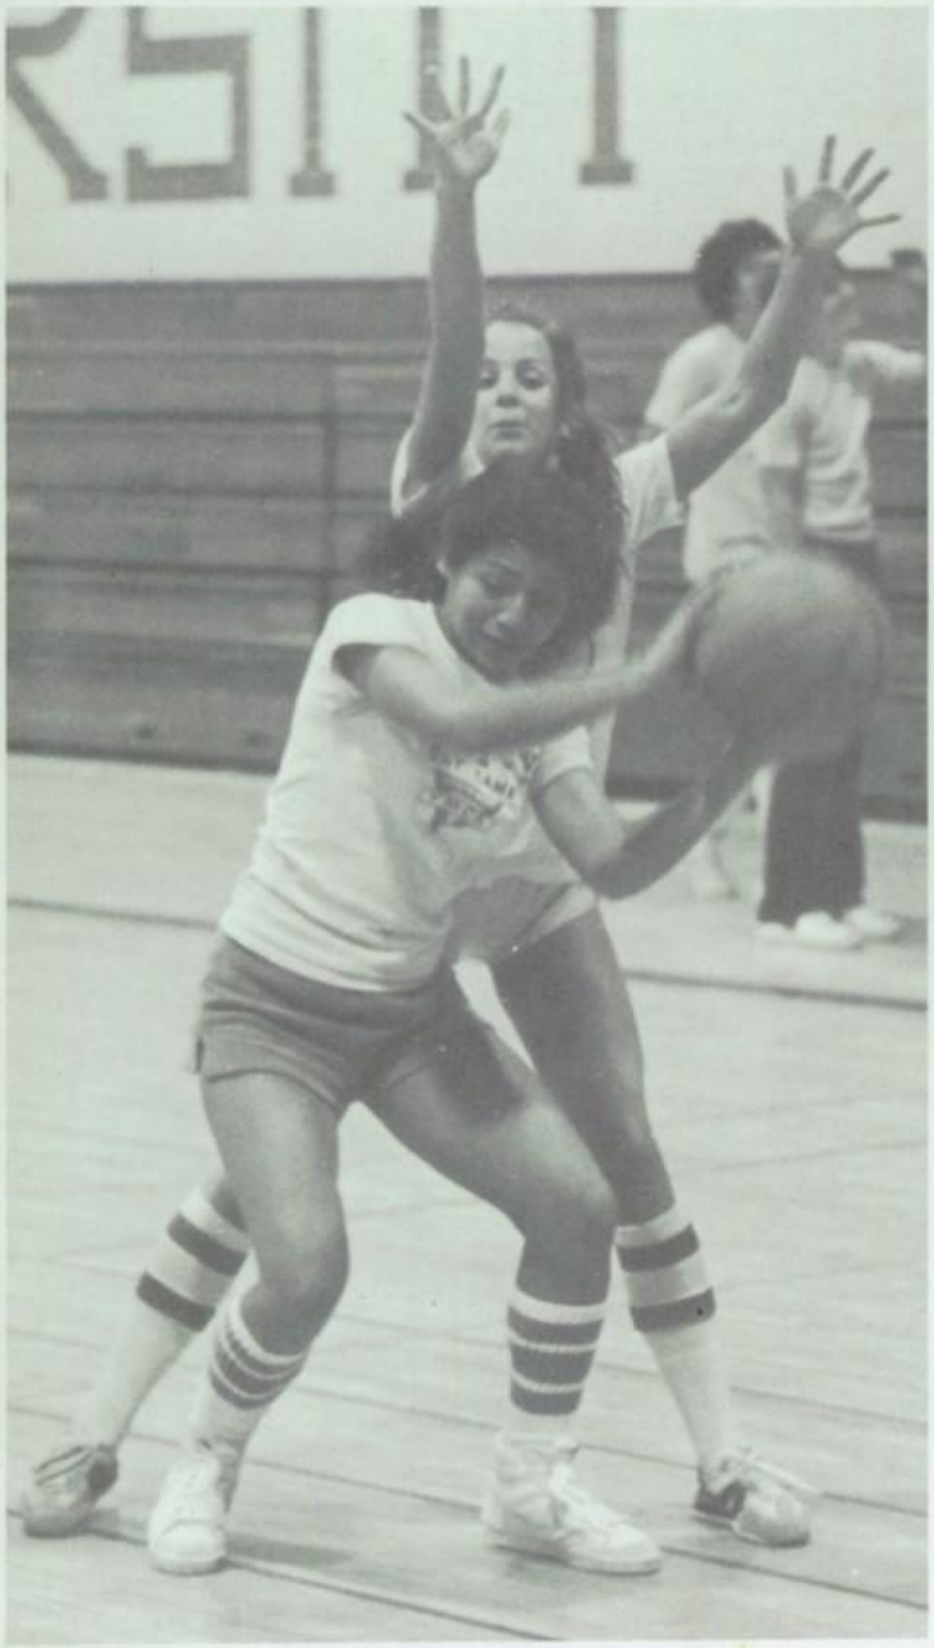
STRIVING FOR EXCELLENCE AFTER HOURS

By 2:30 each afternoon, the majority of Uni students were on their journeys home, leaving a dedicated few to run, jump, throw, sing, memorize lines, write, edit, or photograph. No one enjoyed staying late after school, but a certain camaraderie developed between the people who stayed every day.

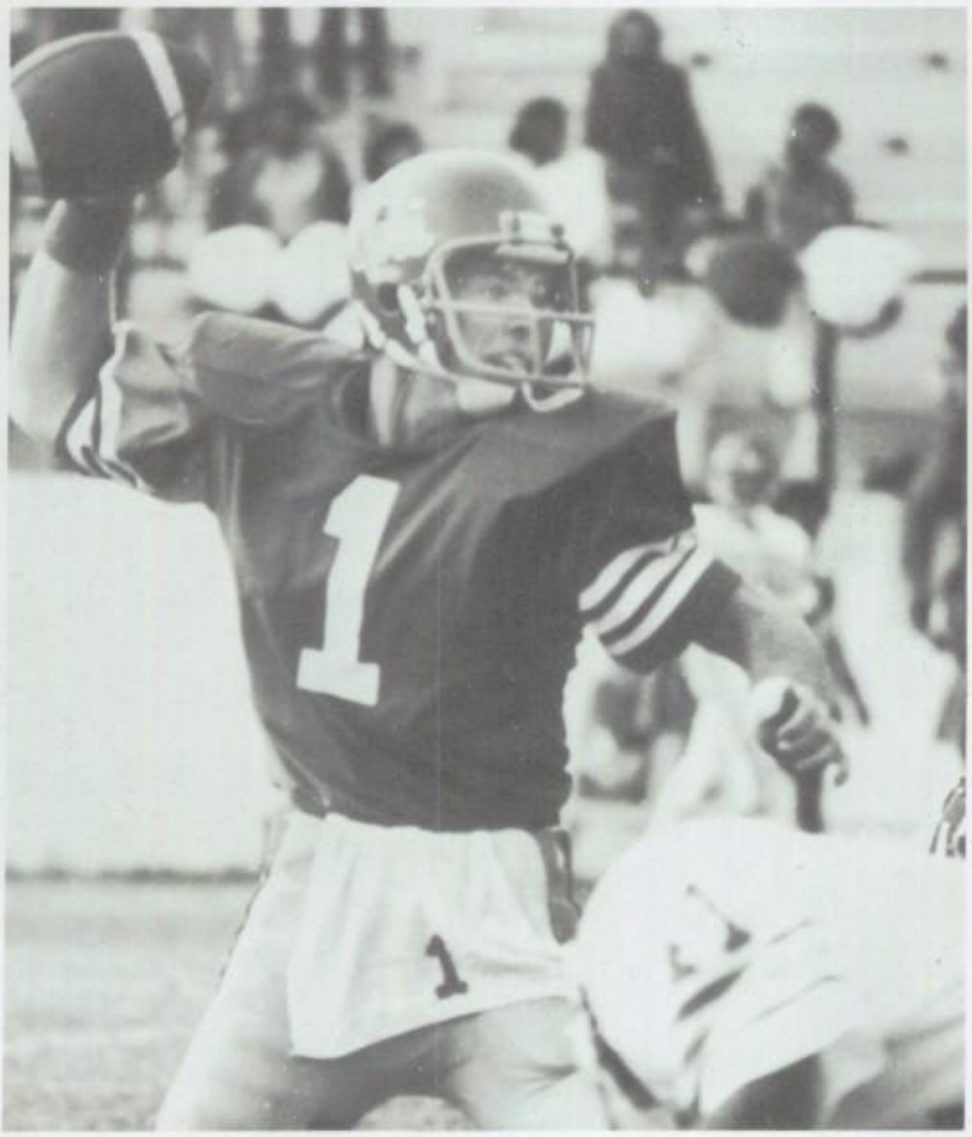
Would-be athletes drilled in the hot sun. The yearbook and newspaper staffs spent long hours rushing to meet deadlines. The Jesters repeated those lines over and over again to get them just right.

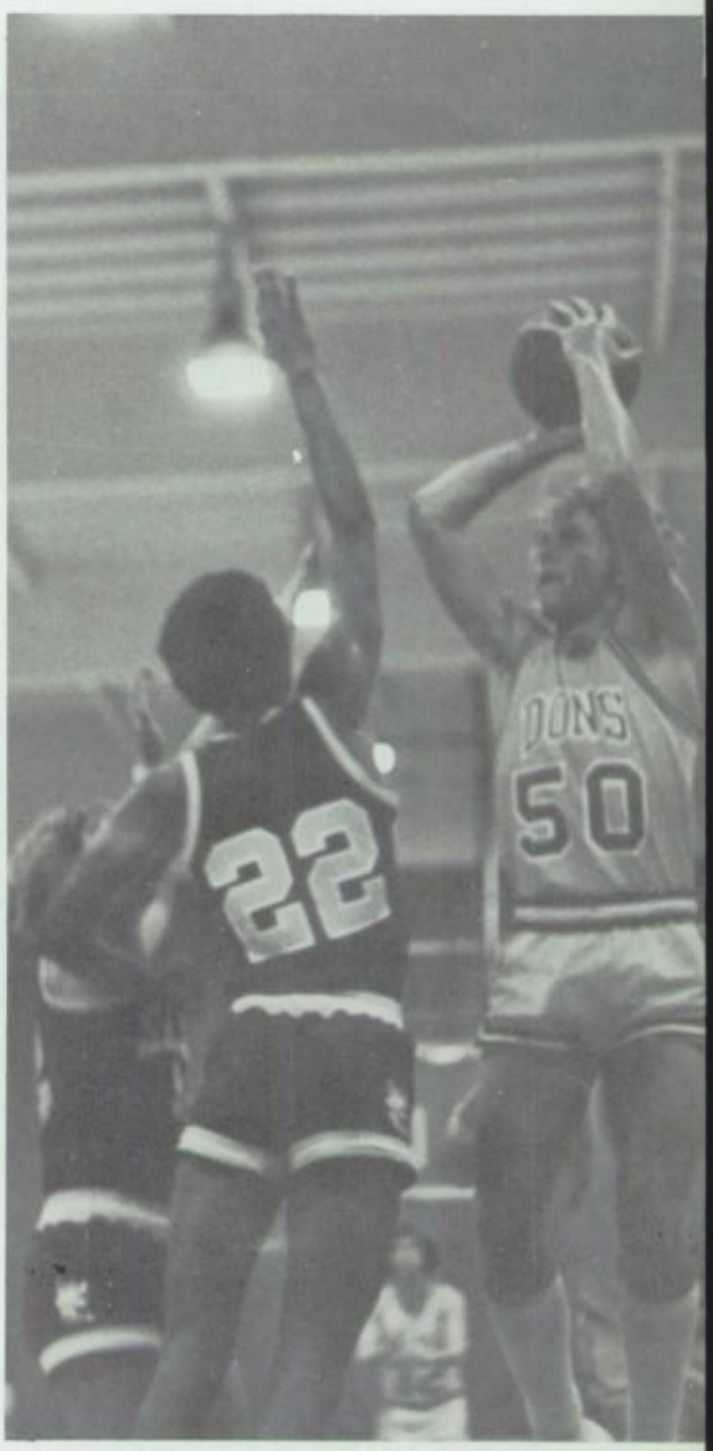
No one was watching in admiration and they certainly weren't getting paid, so why did they spend all those hours practicing? The applause on opening night and the cheer of the crowd made every minute worthwhile.

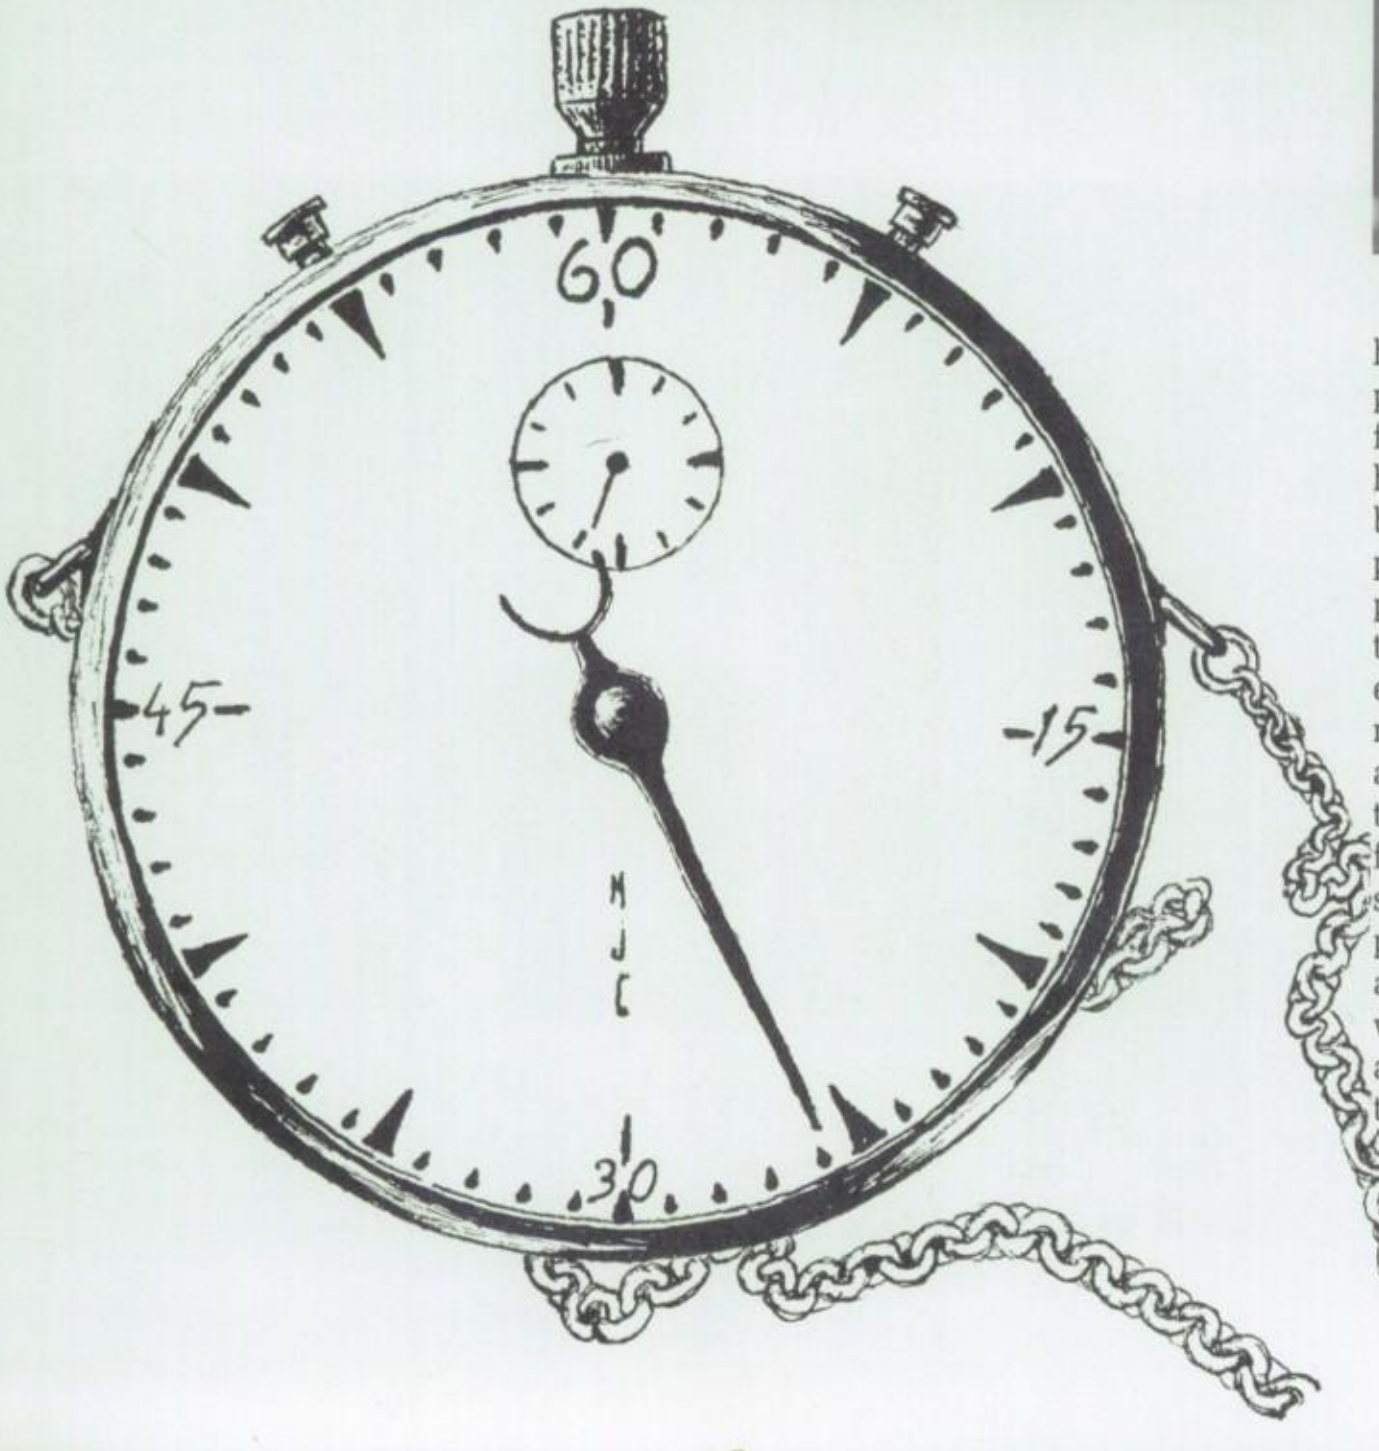
Clockwise From Top Left: David Thistle, quarterback, waits for the snap; "What do we do now that they've got us surrounded?"; . . . a one and a two and a three . . .;" "I really wish she'd quit following me! How does she expect me to make a basket?"; Mika Cutting puts the finishing touches on the Egyptian frieze while Dan Farney, Greg George, Kelly Harrington and Theresa Brazier review their "Murder on the Nile" lines.



SPORTS







Time-out! Everyday after school, hundreds of people spent extra time playing sports on Uni's teams. From football to badminton, each sport has something for everyone. Besides being good exercise, sports teams provide a chance to meet new people, visit other schools, and spend time doing something that one enjoys. It's time for people to get more involved in sports!! Sports help a school's spirit, and the more people that become involved, the better it is for everyone. Staying after school for sports' activities can be the most fun part of the day. It's a time to socialize and enjoy each other's company, while learning about sportsmanship, and improving one's own talents at the same time.

Though the season started at a slow pace for the Varsity Football Team, by the second half of the season they made remarkable progress. The strategies and endeavors of the offense began to succeed, and the team was averaging 19 points per game during the last five games.

Coach Ramos was very optimistic throughout the season. At the beginning, he expected a record of 5-2 for the season. Unfortunately, difficulties hampered the fulfillment of these expectations. Four starting positions were lost due to three key injuries early in the season and the team was very young. Five of the quarterbacks in the league were among the top twelve in the county. The overall record of 3-6 does not reflect the team's potential, for the players had great enthusiasm. Coach Ramos remarked, "We didn't achieve our goals, but what is important is that we had goals and worked very hard towards achieving them."

The Captain's Award was given to Dwayne Parker; the Coaches' Award, to Dave Redfield. The Outstanding Offensive Player was Steve Connolly, and Outstanding Defensive Player, Joe Monahan.

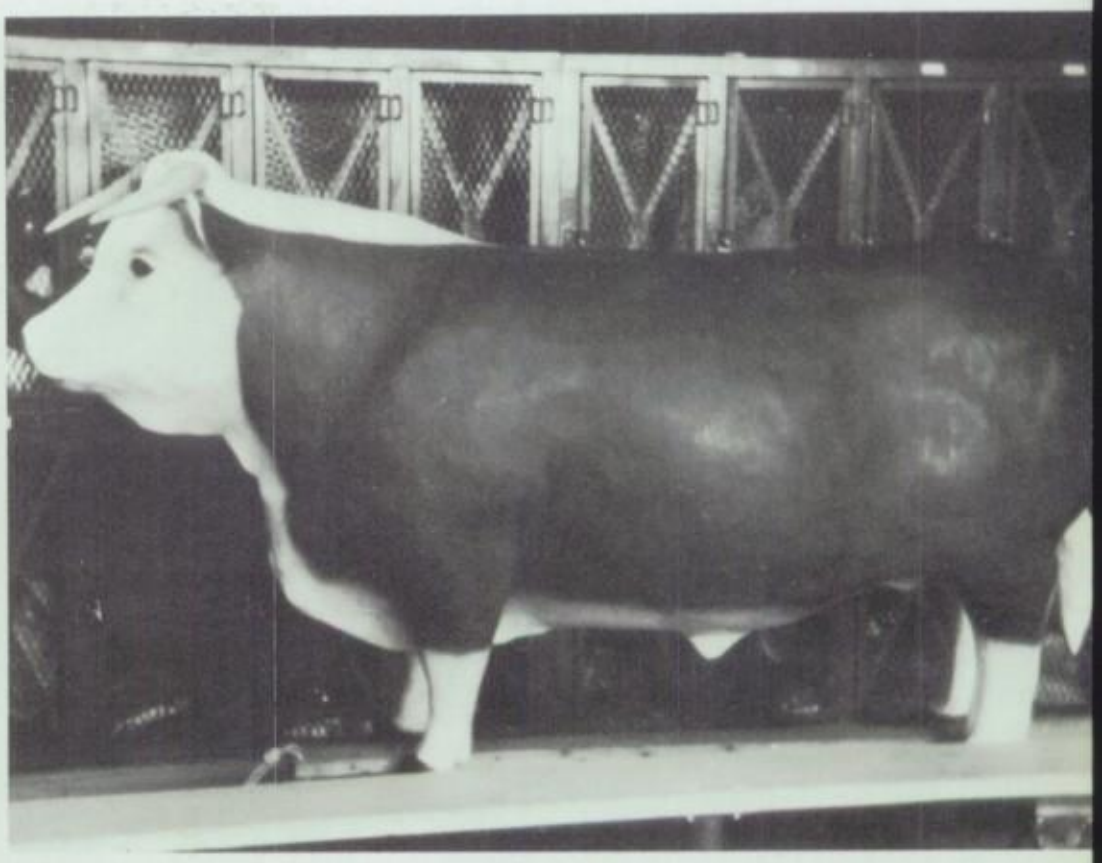
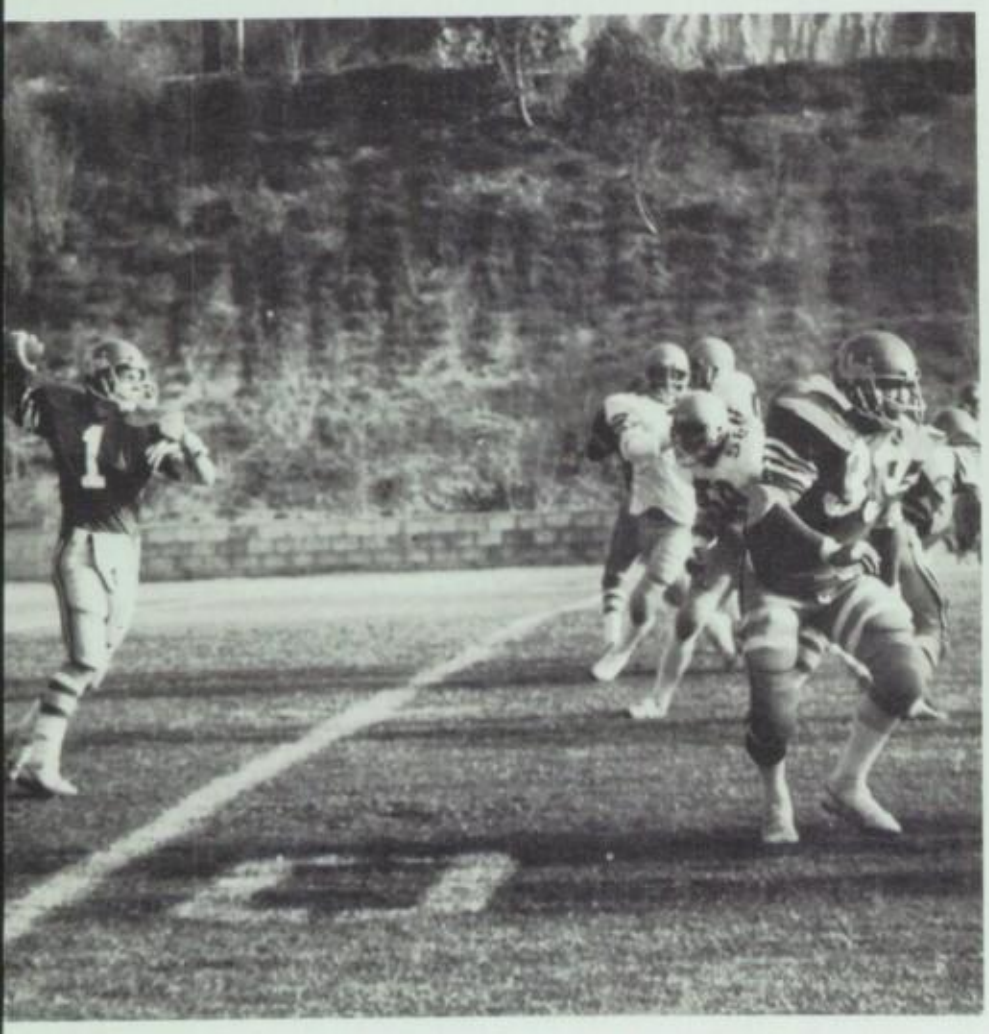
ACHIEVE GOALS





Clockwise from Opposite Page: With blocking by 77 Steve Marshall, Quarterback Gar Millay has time to spot his receiver downfield. The intense emotion on Eve and Lila's faces demonstrates the depth of involvement in Uni fans. The squad's battle cry of "Beef, beef," prompted a new University High mascot; Uni's Joe Monahan brings down a San Diego receiver short of a first down; Number 33 Theron Baynard is set to stop any rushes on quarterback Gar Millay, who is ready to throw a bomb to brother Pat Millay.

YOUNG JV LOOKS TO FUTURE

Although the Junior Varsity Football Team ended their season with a 2-7 record, they did put in a lot of effort, according to Coach Mark Marcus. Being one of the youngest teams in the league was one major difficulty the team faced, because age and size are great advantages to a squad.

The men practiced every day after school with the Varsity, and together they developed a strong team. The players expect to have a more successful season with the Varsity in 1982. David Thistle was awarded the one prize offered by the JV team, Most Valuable Player.

FROSH HAVE TALENT TO GO ON

After many hard hours of practicing, especially on those particularly hot days, the Freshman Football Team developed into a unit and mastered their fundamental skills. The competition was tough throughout the year, specifically from the North County schools. The team's goal was to gain experience in preparing for league competition next year.

Even though they ended their season with a 2-5 record, they still came up on top, beating rival Saints 6-0.

"The future looks promising, Coach Steve Jacobacci remarked, "We've got the size and the talent." He continued, "We had fun. I'm glad we had five games at home instead of driving way out to Vista to play, because it's good to see fan participation and support. I was pleased with our overall performance."

Now in their second year of co-ed competition, the Badminton Team started its season with many new and enthusiastic players. Although the team is still in its developing stages, they've shown a great deal of improvement, said Coach Ted Tibbs.

"Because of relatively little experience, we started at a low skill level. However, we made great strides in making up the difference!" he continued.

Next year many returning young players may better the 1-11 record. Coach Tibbs remarked, "Hopefully next year, we'll be closer competitively with the other teams."

Ann Nagy was named most outstanding player.

VOLLEYBALL BLOCKS OPPOSITION

Three o'clock. The game starts with Captains Peggy North and Ann Miller leading the Varsity Volleyball Team on the court. The enthusiastic crowd claps, then ceases as the first server prepares. The fans hold their breathe until the girl steps forward confidently and sends the ball over the net. A perfect start to an exciting match of blocks, spikes, and passes.

Since the team belongs to a competent league, they faced strong competition, especially from La Jolla and Serra, but as well as being an obstacle, it also helps the team play better. Though difficulties existed, such as a lack of experienced players and only 2 returning starters, the girls ended the season with a record of 10-8, almost qualifying for CIF. Their record is the result of the progress they made during the season and hard training. The girls practiced 2 hours each day, six days a week. Coach Altamirano emphasizes that the greatest improvement is in their teamwork; "they play as a unit and function as a whole." Indeed, the members of the Varsity Team should be commended for the close communication and co-operation with each other.

At the start of the season, the coaches felt very optimistic about the performance of the Junior Varsity Team. The height of the players gave them an advantage over the other team because they were able to reach the net and serve better. Their aggressiveness gave them more confidence, and their ability to communicate with each other resulted in making less mistakes and scoring more points. Since JV Volleyball provides the training for the future members of the Varsity Team, they worked mainly on developing their skills in the fundamentals such as volleying, spiking, setting-up, and serving.

This has been a triumphant season for the JV team since they lost only one game which was against La Jolla, a very tough opponent. This success was brought about by close team-work and constant effort. With a 15-1 seasonal record, the JV team, led by Captain Jaime Fuger and and Co-captain Diana DeCima, has proven to be very promising.

RECORD DOES NOT REFLECT IMPROVEMENT OF

While striving for victory, the Girls' Tennis team was very spirited and the members were supportive of each other as a whole. With a few returning top players, the team consisted mostly of freshmen and sophomores.

The team's seasonal record was 5 wins and 9 losses. Although this was the same outcome as last year's, Coach Natalie Wilstermann said she saw some definite improvement in the depth of quality of the players. The year's Most Valuable Player was Berna Fager, and the Most Improved was Julie Rauner.

A primary goal for next year is to beat one of the better schools: Mission Bay, Bishops, or La Jolla. Without a doubt, Uni can look to the future for a very successful season with the girls' tennis team.

Stamina, enthusiasm, and true team effort were outstanding qualities shown by the Cross Country Team. Coach Brian Bigley, with team captains Tony Case, Patty Zepf, Kris Stiven, and Rosie Peragine did an excellent job with both the boys' and girls' squads. The Boys' team finished off the season with a 4-3 record, while the Girls' maintained a remarkable, undefeated record of 7-0. Team members worked hard preparing themselves for meets by running 6 to 10 miles daily. Many of the female athletes ranked high in the league, making it possible for us to win the CIF title.

BOTH WATER POLO SQUADS TAKE 2nd IN

The Varsity Water-Polo team, headed by coaches Al Frowiss and Kelly Jones, began its season with high hopes of making the CIF playoffs. The team practiced every morning before school and attended occasional afternoon workouts. Backed by a powerful team, the offense scored over fifty goals, vexing the opposition.

David Krische was named Most Valuable Player; Jerry Stehly, Best Offensive Player; Jim Raggio, Best Defensive Player. The squad's record was 9-9 overall, 6-5 in the conference (placing 4th) and 3-3 in the Western League, placing 2nd.

Looking to a winning season from the beginning, Coaches Al Frowiss and Kelly Jones guided the JV team to its 12-7 overall record. In the games they lost, the team was defeated by a narrow margin.

Led by Most Valuable Player Neil Stehly and Most Improved Player David Wright, the team took second in the Western League and third in their conference.

The New Wavers enjoyed an outstanding season. Coach Laura Chirnside and Team captains Lisa Asperin and Susie Martin led the team to a 3-1 league record, losing only to undefeated La Jolla. They've strengthened in number over last year and ended its fine season in a respectable second place. A great amount of individual improvement occurred over the season also. The 400 free relay team, with Laurie Martinez, Kim Neeleman, Lisa Asperin, and Susie Martin, excelled and went on to CIF, taking fourth place. Remarkable team spirit, which was obvious at the meets, carried the New Wavers through the season with high hopes, good times, and a record to be proud of.

VARSITY BASKETBALL HAS POSITIVE ATTITUDE

Kneeling: Paul Zolezzi, Tony Macis, Steve Oddo, John Franca, Tom Cahill, Mark Mahady, Pat Millay.

A positive attitude was one of the Varsity Basketball Team's biggest assets, according to Coach Zach Peck. Although he considered them young and relatively inexperienced, the players practiced hard to improve their performance, concentrating on teamwork and good defense.

The Dons faced tough competition from some very solid teams in the Western League, so the wins over Lincoln and Clairemont stood out as high points in the season.

As well as captain Tim Carroll, the team produced some outstanding players in junior guard Jim Carroll and senior center Bill Holman. Since one-third of the team was comprised of juniors, next year's varsity team will consist mostly of returning players. Coach Peck is confident that they will improve on this year's 4-19 record.

HARD WORK PAYS OFF FOR HOOPSTERS

At the outset of the season Coach Ted Tibbs hoped to achieve a .500 mark. The JVers were a short team and had problems moving the ball. In most games they had to struggle to overcome their opponents height advantage. But the team members compensated for their lack of height by playing with great intensity.

Tibbs saw the team's willingness to work hard as the key to their winning year. The JV hoopsters showed tremendous improvement over the expectations of their coach by compiling a 15-10 overall record. Judging from the progress made by this group composed mostly of sophomores, Tibbs believes that next year's varsity has a lot to look forward to.

Finishing up with a 12-5 record, the Freshman Basketball Team looked back proudly on a well-played season. Although they were defeated by Poway and Mt. Carmel, their toughest opponents, the Dons won all of their home games.

A couple of those contributing to an outstanding team effort were guard Eric Diamond and forward Rob Schmitt. The future looks promising for these young contenders, according to Coach Tom Walbrun. As another enthusiastic team member commented: "In a few years, the Varsity Team will be awesome! Poway and Mt. Carmel, look out!"

An "excellent season" was the way Coach Chuck Ruzicka described the performance of the Varsity Soccer Team. His five years of soccer coaching experience helped him guide the team to a 9-5 record, Uni's best ever.

Captains John Sorahan (the only senior on the team), Bear Kreusser and Mike Mossmer were significant in team plays, with Mark MacCarthy leading in scoring.

"We started together, we grew together, we succeeded together," summed up Coach Ruzicka after an exciting season of soccer.

The JV team ended their season in triumph with the help of Coach Takis Vartelas, who took over mid-season. The Dons defeated Patrick Henry in their final match as well as trying Saints in a tough contest to finish 3-2-1.

Coming in mid-season, Coach Vartelas didn't know what to expect but "I felt great and thought we could do it." They did, winning their first game with his guidance.

Captain Bill Fenick, a junior, led the defense while Colin Stackpole, Frank Steffen and Steve Hurst lent an interesting balance on offense.

VARSITY'S 12-0 EARNS LEAGUE HONORS

With their perfect 12-0 record, the Varsity Softball Team took first in Western League play for the second consecutive year. The many returning players were anxious for another successful year, so they made improvements on the offense and were able to add to their already strong defense.

But enthusiasm and skill were not all that was needed to achieve their goals; unity and commitment were very important. Coach Margaret Mauro remarked, "The team itself was talented but the key to a successful season was that we channeled that talent in the right direction."

Pitcher Sue Purcell's 10-0 record earned her the League Player of the Year award while Lisa Noriega, Sandra Leighton and Heidi Booraem were named All-League. Freshmen Chris Carlson and Jeanne Tomcavage were named to the Honorable Mention team.

Though Junior Varsity Softball is not as competitive as Varsity, it's still an important step taken by future Varsity players. This year's team was young, inexperienced and mostly freshman.

"Since it is difficult to combine the talents of thirteen individuals," said Coach Joe Connolly, "we emphasized the importance of unity. The players concentrated on developing their skills and on becoming a team."

He continued that after the first few games of the season, they learned what it took to win, were able to play as a whole and improved every game. They took the contests seriously, but at the same time were highly spirited and able to enjoy the sport.

With the leadership of pitcher Tresha Lopez, catcher Jenn Collins, and infielder Christie Barabas, the team batted their way to a triumphant 7-5 record.

WRESTLERS PIN HOPES ON LIGHTWEIGHTS

After winning the CIF Title for three consecutive years, the Wrestling team looked to another winning season. During practice sessions both after school and on Saturday mornings, the wrestlers strived for perfection. Coach Ed Harvey said that the team consisted of good learners and that they were getting better all the time. The mat men finished their season with a 4-3 record with wins over San Diego, Hoover, La Jolla, and Lincoln. Forfeits in the heavier weight classes were a main reason for the varsity's losses. However, the Dons hope to recruit heavyweights for next year's squad and figure they'll be tough to beat.

Starting the season with a positive attitude, the Junior Varsity wrestlers expected to win most of their matches throughout the season. However, through lack of personnel they were forced to forfeit in three weight classes at every meet. Still, the team finished the season with a 4-3 record boasting victories over Hoover, La Jolla, Lincoln, and rival Saints. Coach Andy Gagliano, a Uni alumnus, emphasized that they were a very good team with a lot of individual talent.

QUALITY SWIMMERS ON VARSITY AND JV

With the direction of Coach Al Frowiss, the swim team was prepared for one of its best seasons. With quality swimmers returning, their only weakness at the start of the season was a shortage of free stylers. A young team with only three seniors, the varsity expected Dave Krische, and Steve and Tom Schatz to be outstanding contributors. Both the varsity and JV swimmers aimed to beat their toughest opponents, La Jolla and Saints.

Spirits were high as the Track and Field Team headed into a new season of stiff competition. They were confident that their combination of returning champions and fresh talent could help them defeat their toughest competition, La Jolla, Serra, and San Diego.

One of those returning champions was star long and standing jumper, junior Anthony McClendon. He currently holds the school record in the events after breaking his own record last season. He took second place in the Jack in the Box Invitational in February. The team also counted on the strength of CIF champs Rosie Peragine, Anne Schmidt, and Malia Miracle.

With new distance coach Dana Shelburne and new field coach Joe Galindo assisting him, head coach Mark Marcus had high hopes for this season. "We're training for a great year in track," Marcus commented.

The Golf team started the season with a lot of expectations and enthusiasm to achieve their goals. They looked forward to taking a second place and giving La Jolla a run for first place. They also hoped to requalify a player for the state championship.

Three returning lettermen — Gary Regalado, David Jannone, and Mike Tebbetts, were expected to lead the team to victory. Gary Regalado was last year's Most Valuable Player; David Jannone has constantly improved each year; and Mike Tebbetts was expected to help the team's score.

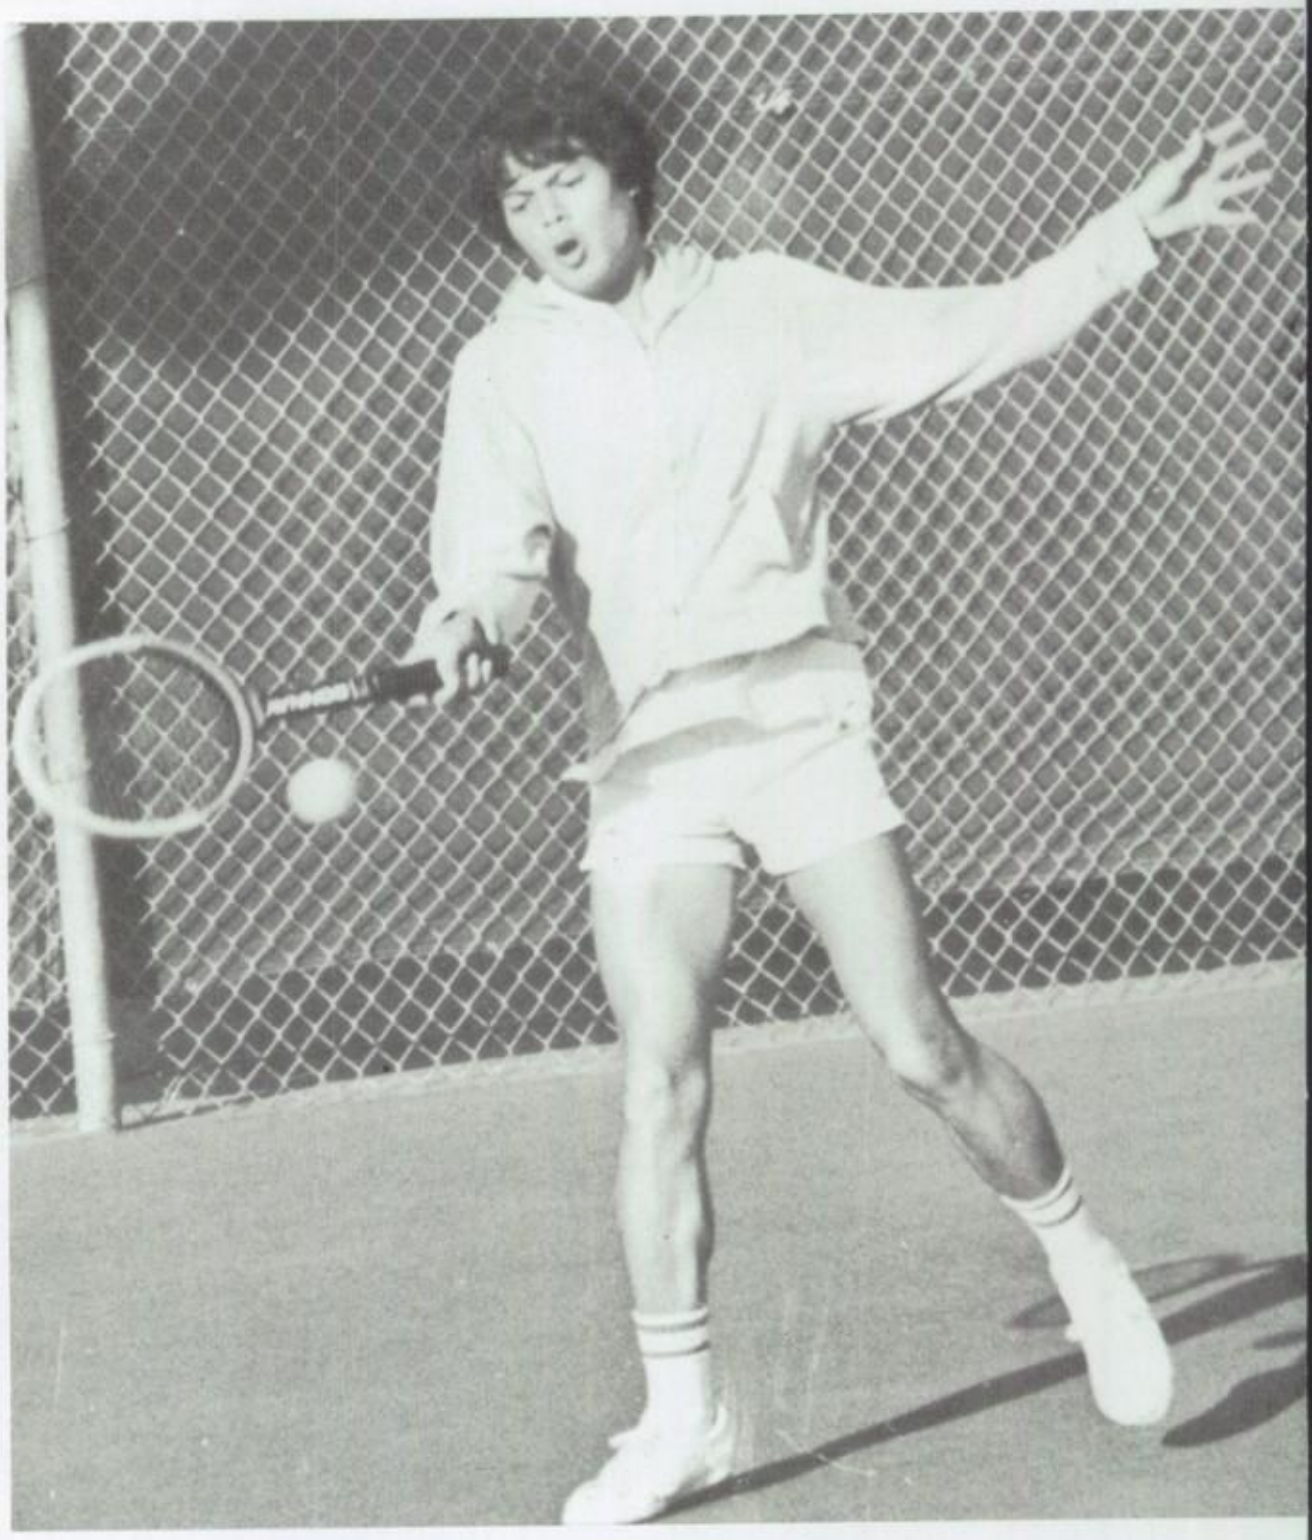
BOYS' TENNIS SWINGS INTO SEASON



Starting off another smashing season, the Boys' Tennis Team was very optimistic. The team worked well together, which was one important aspect that helped them out. Top seeded players Gil Illescas and Mike Riordan helped lead the team to victories.

Coach Ron Beck had high expectations for the team and not only looked forward to a fun and rewarding season, but also one to make improvements, make great plays, and make friends.

BASKETBALL TEAM SHOOTS FOR UPSETS

Coach Margaret Mauro expected the season to be a long and hard one, but successful at the end for the Girls' Varsity Basketball Team. They had the talent and the potential, and perhaps the only thing that could hurt their game was the lack of varsity experience. To compensate, they planned to work on their offensive attack and try to keep mistakes at the minimum.

The team was composed of five returning varsity players and quite a few of last year's JV players, now sophomores. Coach Mauro counted on Shelley McKeone's height as an offensive and defensive threat to opponents. She also looked to Johnna Matranga's shooting, Sue Purcell's rebounding and defense, and Helen and Pam Douglass' quickness and speed to help score more points, especially in games against La Jolla and Hoover.

"We'll catch a few second looks and pull off some big upsets. We'll give it our best shot," Coach Mauro concluded.

Since most of last year's JV moved on to Varsity, Coach Zachary Peck ended up with a team of freshmen and three returning players — Margaret Pfeil, Annalese Zeeck, and Camille Selis.

Coach Peck intended for the team to have fun primarily, but to be competitive also. Because the players were young and inexperienced, emphasis was given to the fundamentals such as shooting correctly and passing, and what every team should have: teamwork and cooperation. They expected a lot of competition from La Jolla, Mission Bay, and non-league opponents.

Mr. Peck expected great performances from Patrice Zeeck, and Elizabeth Hunter because of their height and coordination, and Leslie Sherman and Mary Catherine Kane for their accurate shooting.

BASEBALL READY FOR 2ND CIF CHAMPIONSHIP

Having been the CIF champs last year and the Western League Champs for four years in a row, the Varsity Baseball team had another challenging season ahead of them. They made more progress at the beginning of the season than they had at the same time last year. Their main concern was to win each game, especially the fourteen league games, and to win the League again, then worry about the play-offs.

Coach Dick Serrano expected the Western League to be very competitive because of improvements made within the League. Hoover and Mission Bay were expected to be their toughest opponents, but four other schools are not far behind them.

The team was led by Co-captains Mike Correia, a top-notch pitcher and the 1980 CIF player of the year in the county; Tim Carroll; and Nezi Balelo, one of the better defensive players in the county; they are now in their third year as lettermen. Dwayne Parker was an exceptional catcher last year and had improved even more this year. Gar Millay, Kyle Keller and Tim Carroll are excellent hitters while Rod Wilske faces the possiblity of starting in centerfield this year.

The team had a positive attitude, especially the young players who were in JV last year, and the transfers because their ambitions were not only to win a position, they showed interest in helping the team achieve its goals.

"All the players are contributing 100% towards accomplishing the team's hopes. I think that we can do very well this year but all the same time, it will take a lot of hard work," remarked Coach Serrano.

SOLID JV INFIELD STARS ON DIAMOND

JR. VARSITY —Front Row: Andy Hawes, Joe Filipone, Scott Robinson, Kevin Kennedy, Bobby Stocklin, John Sharp, Frank Giacalone, Dale Pontecorvo. Back Row: Xavier Porlas, Dave Thistle, Ken Brown, Jim O'Brien, Alfredo Anguiano, Mark MacCarthy, Bill Rumsey, Dave Millan, Coach Ted Tibbs.

Entering the season with a solid infield defense as well as an above average pitching staff, the J.V. Baseball Team was prepared for a challenging season. At the outset, Coach Tibbs set up some definite goals. One was to develop the outfield. He planned to do this by stressing fundamentals such as thinking ahead and using cutoffs. Another was to finish with a .500 record. Tibbs felt the team should make it this far because of the competitive attitude of the players. With these goals in mind, he looked forward to a rewarding season with much improvement from the first game to the last.

PITCHERS, POWER HITTERS LEAD FROSH

The mental part of baseball, developing a winning attitude, can be just as important as the physical. It is one of the things that facilitates scoring, according to Coach Tom Walbrun. He felt that the season would go successfully with a winning record, and was very optimistic about the team.

"We've got good pitching and good power hitters! It's going to go great!" he commented. He expected power hitters Mike Cameron, Jim Morris, and Burt Huerta to do well; Mike Hanesly, Shawn Keller, and Burt Huerta for their talent and style as pitchers.

Coach Walbrun commented that it's a challenge as well as fun to teach a Frosh team, and that they've got a lot to learn. "I am very excited about this season. We've got an excellent team, excellent players, and I think we'll do okay."

PERSPECTIVE

The Show Must Go On

One is lost.
Grievance is a vitality among the young at heart.
Memories linger on
with an unquestionable
Fate.
Patience,
a virtue forgotten amidst consequence,
lies hidden away.
The Big Tent of Life
collapses.
The clown smiles
no more.
The Ringmaster's tears lie defeated
on the cold earth
for fear of man's existence
being impounded
in subdued battle.
A light is shone
upon the weeping circus.
Conscience whispers,
"The Show must go on."
For depression gone unnoticed
wearies the crowd.
Once again,
performers bravely
pick up their pieces of past and recreate a vision of achieving success.
The audience continues
to cheer,
For in the eyes of
an entertainer,
a bow
speaks of the Pride of all humanity
as the show continues on.

The sky's the limit, that's what they say;
I'm getting closer with each passing day.
Whether sunny, windy, rainy, or snowing.
Friendships and goals are what keep me going.
The magic words spoken before Grandfather's depart,
Have long been cherished in the depth of my heart.
Whatever I attempt, He'll be by my side,
And if I should fail, He'll see that I tried.
When I cease to move higher beyond many tries,
And hot, salty tears spill forth from my eyes,
I wipe them away and continue on,
Building my confidence to the peak of its strong.

Next Time

You never said, "I love you."
I never said, "I care."
Long forgotten are the moments and the memories we shared.

You never brought me flowers.
But then, I never asked.
Now try will I to bury pain
and heartache in the past.

Yet,
Next time you'll say, "I love you."
And I'll let him know I care.
And precious will be the moments and the memories we share.

Life has many answers.
If we don't inquire of the questions,
We'll never find the answers.

The Winter

In the winter of our eyes
we see
the memories made sweet
by recollection.
How like silk the springtime of today
becomes the texture of your mind.
We fear the somber sadness
our own remorse.
The suicide of summers
long past our prime.
The autumn brings a fallen leaf drained of love.
In the winter of our eyes
we see,
the life, the days worth living
a cycle
the dream.

NO RESPONSE

This quiet summer morning is deceptively peaceful. The sun shines on the smooth, gray bark of a linden tree and filters down through the lime colored leaves. Pipes cling to alternating light and dark bricks that climb up to a dim window.

From the white sill of this window a floppy eared, brown and white cocker spaniel curiously watches over two small children playing. They are riding on a gray, uncluttered sidewalk which runs along a pock marked curb.

Dark-haired Tommy pushes his small, green bicycle up to the two black-brown doors of his family's apartment. He seems unconcerned and innocent. Behind him his older sister, Beth, pedals her red toy tractor. The timid look on her face hides the terror in her heart. From a window above the children, their mother cautiously contemplates thoughts of her own. Old, balding Grandpa, wearing a faded blue workman's apron, peers out of his doorway.

Only yesterday this was an ordinary family. Last night Tommy and Beth were happily running downstairs to greet their tired father. Suddenly, they saw three sinister figures confront him. The men, all wearing dark, double breasted business suits, violently attacked Mr. Link. In the horrifying confusion, the children heard one of the gangsters tell their dad that it was stupid of him to try to expose their employer. They intended to make sure he wouldn't ever be a threat to them again. One of the belligerent men revealed a gleaming razor-sharp knife and plunged it mercilessly into the victim's heart! Mr. Link's lifeless body fell into the shadows.

At this agonizing moment, the children's terrified screams had filled the neighborhood. The men pursued the children, but they made it safely inside and up to their mother. Grandpa furtively looked out the door and saw the assailants driving away in a big, black Cadillac.

The Links were hysterical when Grandpa called the police. The police came and listened to the story; by midnight, terror was replaced by grief.

Today the stunned family still cannot react. They are waiting for the police to make some sense out of what happened. The children have left the sidewalk and gone to their rooms. A police detective and a representative from the Justice Department arrive to explain what is going on to Mrs. Link and her father. The detective says, "Your husband worked for a company that designs nuclear weapons for the government. He discovered that his boss was selling secrets to the Communists. He had contacted us and the Justice Department previously, and we arranged for him to testify next week. That was the reason for his death."

The detective continues, "Since your children saw the murder, these hit men could try to harm them at any time. I think it would be best if we put them in protective custody right now."

Mrs. Link agrees, "I'll go get them."

As she climbs the stairs, she hears the dog whining. She enters the children's room only to find it empty. She calls out, "Tommy! Beth!" There is no response. She runs to the window, and through the lime green leaves she sees a big, black cadillac screeching away.

THE CHASE

The horse could be heard snorting and pawing behind the stall door. The tawny Palomino had been carrying on all night, and the weak morning sun filtering in through the tiny window in the barn seemed to give him new strength.

A group of men gathered outside the stall. It had taken the eleven of them three months to catch this golden marauder. The colt had been tearing down or jumping fences and getting into grain bins all over the county.

The men stood discussing the situation. Only a few had any definite ideas about what to do, and they couldn't get the others to agree on any one suggestion. Stumped for the moment, the group wandered back up to the big house.

Kim glanced around the room once more and shuddered. The door was barred, as was the small window beside it. "There's just no way out," she thought wearily. The stuffy room with its low ceiling seemed to be closing in on her.

She knew she never should have come to this town. She had known it the moment she looked down the tiny main street. Sure, the people had been polite enough, but she had sensed their distrust right from the start. Somehow, she hadn't trusted them, either. She had not known how quickly disaster could strike.

Her heart lurched as the bars on the door slid aside, then quieted somewhat when a small negro boy was shoved inside. The door banged shut and the child almost dropped the food he was carrying for her.

Considerably relieved to find that the guard hadn't come, Kim watched the boy Toby approach her. She didn't say anything, just smiled encouragingly. In her brief stay in the town, she had discovered that Toby was a deaf mute, and little more than a slave. In this small town, blacks were looked down upon, and Toby especially because he was an orphan with no way of defending himself. He took courage from her warm smile and stepped toward her.

It was chaos at the big house. People stood staring at the gaping hole in the side of the barn. The horse had actually kicked out the wall!

Soon the baying of many hounds filled the air. The ranch dogs in the area had been set out to trail the pony. Over the noise of all the others, a deep bay could be heard. A magnificent collie led the pack. The wind whipped through his thick coat as he raced off, the others following. Five and a half miles ahead of this excited pack, the Palomino paced on, his flanks glistening in the hot sun.

Kim looked at the mess she was supposed to eat. She just had to get out of here! Once more she glanced around the dirty room, and this time she saw something she hadn't noticed before. If she looked from the right angle, the frame holding the bars on the window looked loose. She ran over and rattled it — it was loose! Glad that the guard had given in to her pleas to open the window, she looked around the room for some kind of lever. She picked up the blunt knife Toby had put down and though the blade bent, she got the frame loose enough to knock out. Kim glanced back and motioned for Toby to come. Through signs, she told him of her simple plan to crawl through the window and sneak around to the woods behind the jail. She helped Toby out first, then followed. Together, they ran silently into the trees.

Three days had passed since the hunt first started. The other dogs had long since given up, but still the Collie followed the horse. Neither had stopped once, the pony just dragging along fast enough to keep a little ahead of the dog; the dog just going fast enough to keep up with the pony. As the next day approached, the two had almost reached a compromise; the pony ignored the Collie; they both were too exhausted to do anything but stumble on. Soon the colt stopped and cropped the lush grass, oblivious to anything but his ravenous hunger. The dog, grateful for the rest, flopped out on the ground, his sides heaving. A little later, the dog stretched and sniffed; he caught and ate a few mice which gave him some strength. Then the pony was off again, this time with a definite destination: a cool, clear stream high in the nearby mountains. The Collie now trotted right at the colt's side, the horse completely disregarding its adopted shadow.

Kim again stopped and helped Toby to his feet. He was really losing the battle; it was their third day on the run and it had been nerve-racking, just staying ahead of the mob from the town. Neither had had much to eat — Kim had only run in and out of a small, isolated market and they had eaten hurriedly. Soon they would be out of this state and into California. When they were there, her brother would help them — she had called him from a public telephone yesterday.

She grabbed Toby and dragged him into the bushes; she had just seen a car's headlights coming toward them. She did a double take; it was her brother's car! The car pulled up, her brother got out; she and Toby were safe.

The blue-gray sky smiles peacefully down at the scene below. A happy, tinkling stream winds unhurriedly around and under an old stone bridge. Wet, mossy stones are scattered heedlessly at the edge of the sparkling water. The crackly leaves on knotty branches whisper excitedly in the slight breeze. Golden sunlight filters down upon the equally golden Palomino. The now gentle pony drinks unconcernedly as the handsome, attentive Collie gazes into the distance, his reflection elusive in the water lapping at his feet. Furtive shadows creep along the ground as time passes, distorted images of the sprawling black trees. The alert, sensitive ears of the horse flick instinctively and the pony canters off, with the Collie trotting faithfully behind.

I Burned the Courthouse, Ma

If we only looked for the reason behind the words,
The motivation behind the blow,
We'd understand social unrest.

But instead we choose only to read the slogans,
Condemn the violence,
And jail the revolutionaries.

We never stop to question, "Why?"
Why are the students militant?
Why do our "minorities" burn and pillage?
Where do the stems and roots of social unrest lie?

We can't appease them with soothing word band-aids.
We won't solve the problem with welfare.
It can only start with respect.

Respect for the life of the child in it's mother's womb.
Respect for the inquisitiveness of a school-child.
Respect for the changes in a teenager.
Respect for the life and needs of all those around us.

Without respect a person cannot work,
Cannot love himself and therefore cannot love others.
The roots and stems of social unrest lie in our lack of respect.

Quiet Splendor

He sat there, oblivious to my keen scrutiny, enjoying a security his life did not usually give him. I, on the other hand, was uncomfortably perched high in the foliage, finally coming to the end of my search. These last few weeks had proved difficult. Pursuing a marked criminal and the head of the Sicilian Syndicate is not a job for just anyone.

Up until now, he had stayed aloof from all forms of the law. He had always managed to skip the country just in time to avoid indictments. He was especially difficult to locate this time, due to his New Zealand mountain retreat, to which he inconspicuously escaped.

Malia Miracle

It was here that he could forget the outside world. It was a paradise all his own with no worries to bother him. The setting was colorful and plush. He smoked a cigarette with enjoyment. The blue robe he wore scraped the thick, green grass as he changed to another position. He sank deep into the large, colorful cushions which supported him. This was truly a well hidden estate which took me long days to find. Now that I had found my fugitive, his time was up.

The moment which I had been waiting for was at hand. It was time to act. Reaching for my gun, I ruffled the leaves, and in doing so, captured his attention. From the recesses of the garden, a gunshot sounded. The bullet was swift. It was a direct hit in my chest. I fell from the heights and in seconds was staring up at a dozen armed men clad in dark suits. One more shot ended it instantly for me. I was removed and the men resumed their hidden positions. To this man, so peacefully lounging, I was nothing more than a small disruption in his quiet splendor.

IN THE BEGINNING

The world had been green for a long time and no evil had yet touched its serenity. The grass grew abundantly, green and lush. Beautiful wildflowers bloomed and added color to the shade of the trees.

More noticeable were the animals; they stood together in pairs, still, tranquil, yet alert, as though they were threatened but could or would do nothing. There was a pair of zebras, bold stripes of black and white seeming to stand out in warning, two giraffes, yellow and brown spots blending quietly with the branches and fern leaves. Near the feet of the zebras were a lion and lioness, King and Queen of the jungle, looking as though their reign was coming to an end, and all they could do was retreat silently. A pair of Hallowe'en tigers stared from the grass, ready for flight, and the elephants, gentle giants of the plain, stood behind them.

All this was taken in by her eye but was not noticed. It was the apple tree, tall and slender, its long branches spread protectively, which held her eye. It seemed to draw her toward itself in a whirlpool of temptation, the axis of all that existed and all that was to exist. Slowly, her delicate hand reached for the perfect red apple among the branches. As it met her hand, a small wave of repulsion, and yet attraction, ran through her body. She withdrew her hand quickly, but the apple was still there.

Staring down at the small fruit, she felt a great longing to have just one small bite, nothing harmful. The sweet juice of the apple ran deliciously down her throat, drowning her, making her want to cough. Looking up she realized she was alone. The birds and animals had disappeared as though they had never been there.

The apple's taste had gone dry and sour, and in the silence of the world the only sound in the jungle was a woman's piteous weeping, drowning out the soft hiss of a small snake passing in the grass.

It's Never Quite the Same

Would it ever come to an end? They had been traveling along the dirt path for hours. She wondered how long it had been since someone had come this way. A couple of hours? A couple of days? Or perhaps years? In any case, they were still in the middle of nowhere traveling to an unknown destination. She looked at her reflection in the car window. She was young and pretty with blonde hair and green eyes, very attractive. She was getting close to thirty, but still retained her schoolgirl figure.

She looked over at him. His brown hair, deep, piercing eyes and rugged features gave him an enigmatic appearance. Two years ago, she had found him wandering aimlessly on a desolate road, and had offered him a ride. She had felt a certain attraction to him right away. She had dropped him off at a house two blocks from hers. Living in such a small town, she wondered why they had never met. She made a mental note to walk that way more often. She saw him during the next couple of weeks and eventually, though she couldn't remember how, they had become close friends. Close, she chuckled to herself. They had been sharing an apartment for over six months and were starting to talk marriage. Or at least she was; he was the proverbial free soul, hard to pin down. They had to talk about it when they got back from this trip.

The tires rolling over a rock in the road jolted her from her thoughts. Where were they? No way of telling, but the area looked pretty undisturbed; the grass was nearly six feet tall. She wished he would tell her where they were going.

She probably thinks I'm out of my mind he thought. It seemed like an endless journey to him, also. But he just had to find our for certain if . . . Don't think about it, he told himself. This silence is deafening, he thought, I'll turn on the radio. That's no good, just static. Must be too far from town. They rounded the next bend and he could see the ridge. They were going toward a house at the foot of the mountain.

She couldn't stand it anymore. "Where are we going, and why?" she asked.

He knew her curiosity was killing her. "It's a long story," he answered.

"Well, I've got time."

"Okay," he replied, "you'll find out sooner or later, anyway. We're going to a house just up ahead. I got the directions from my mother."

"Who lives there?," she asked.

"Hopefully, my father. You see, he left when I was ten. Just ran out on mom and me. Mother said she always knew where he was, but she never cared to retrieve him. She couldn't have made him come back, anyway. He was always a free spirit; I guess I inherited that from him. I just had to come out here once to find out exactly why he left."

He'd never told her that, she mused, but then again she had never asked. Maybe this trip would serve to free some of the memories from his mind. Maybe they could get married. Her spirits brightened.

They both retired again to their own thoughts as the car bumped along the road. They rounded the final corner and suddenly they were there. It was a little log cabin with a chimney pouring smoke into the sky. It looked like a picture postcard. The house was nestled in a deep, wide valley. A winding river flowed by the house. All of this was set against a backdrop of snow-capped mountains.

He stopped the car as apprehension filled him. What if his father didn't want to see him? Could he stand yet another rejection? He sensed his moment of truth was at hand and eased on down the road. They pulled up, both got out, and they started toward the cabin door. He knocked on the door; it opened and a man looked out at them. They do bear some resemblance, she thought.

"We hate to bother you sir, but we're sort of lost," he said. "Could you tell us how to get back to town?"

How could he do that, she wondered. At the last moment, his spirit waned and he decided not to reveal himself. Well, at least I know he's alright, but he doesn't need to know who I am, the boy thought.

"Come on in," the old man replied, "I'm always happy to help strangers. I'll get you both something to eat, and I'll give you directions."

The old man noticed right away. He had been gone a long time, but not so long that he couldn't recognize his own flesh and blood. He must know who I am, but if he would rather not admit it then I'll leave it alone.

The couple stepped inside. He got them both a sandwich and a beer and they sat down by the fire. The old man asked them how they had traveled that far.

"We were just going for a drive and got lost in the forest," his son replied. "It must be lonely living out here away from civilization. Don't you sometimes want to leave?"

"No," the old man answered, "I love it here. Once I left a wife and son I loved very much because I couldn't live with anyone. I can't take anyone in the same house with me."

So that was it, the boy thought. The old guy couldn't stay in a house with anyone. The boy felt bitter, very bitter. The couple finished their food, thanked the man, and went back to their car.

"Why didn't you tell him who you were?" she asked.

"Because I realized life was okay twenty years when we were apart, and so why not leave it that way? You know the old cliche, 'You can't go back.' It wouldn't be the same, honey. Least I know he's all right, and it wasn't my fault that he left."

He started the car, waved to the old man at the door of the house, and bounced down the road.

She could already picture a big church wedding. Everyone in town would be invited, except of course, his father. Maybe this day wasn't so bad after all, she thought.

The old man stood at the door long after they were out of sight. Well, he thought, my son surely turned out fine without me. At least I got to see the finished product. He wondered if things always turned out for the better. The old man went back in and stared at the fire.

Robert Kelly

Mickey McCartney

Everything glittered at that party: the champagne, the guests, my mother. Especially my mother. I couldn't remember seeing her so beautiful, or so happy. I didn't know what the party was for, but since I was only six, I was thrilled that I was even allowed to stay up for it. "This should be a celebration for you, too," Mama had told me. I was in my best frilly dress and got to carry a platter of hors d'oeuvres and serve them to the guests.

I found Bob around nine o'clock. I wanted to ask him my question because he was my favorite of "Mommy's good friends." I liked him because he looked like me and whenever we went anywhere, people thought he was my daddy. But now he was with a tall, thin girl he called Patricia. (I had seen her before when mommy took me to a movie. Bob and she were coming out of the other movie, some gushy, romantic thing. Mom really liked the movie we saw. She likes movies that make her cry.)

I didn't want Patricia to hear my question, but I couldn't get her away from Bob. He smiled down at me, waiting, so I asked, "Why is Mommy so happy? What's this party for anyway?"

"Well, honey," he grinned, "Your mom's happy because she's free now. She and your real daddy aren't married anymore."

"Why does that make her happy? Wasn't my daddy nice?"

Bob's mouth turned up at the corners as he answered, "Oh, your daddy was very loving! He loved almost everybody he met."

Patricia giggled and scolded, "Now, Bob, remember you're talking about her father."

With a concerned look on his face, Bob turned back to me and said, "I'm sorry, honey. I shouldn't be making you think bad things about your father, even if you don't know him."

Patricia pulled him away from me then. I stood by myself in the middle of that party wondering why my daddy's love was a bad thing.

Unfulfilled Visions

We have been here for as long as I can remember, living in the corner room of a house owned by a family of three. We have celebrated in good, happy times and mourned in difficult, sad times. Today the house is quiet as we wait for them to return from the cemetery.

I was especially close to Jennifer. She came to see me often and sometimes even told me what she hoped the future would hold for her. Marriage? A family? A career?

As soon as she was settled she could have me. You see, I am fine and delicately designed china that was promised to her by her grandmother, Rose.

Even as a child, Jennifer had admired me through the glass doors of the china cabinet. When she was eight, she had a birthday party and invited her friends. I was not used though, for her mother feared that I would break. She bragged that one day she would be old enough to use the china and the good silver as well. There are still scratches on the darkly stained table serving as memories of that birthday party.

The time did come for a big celebration. It was her high school graduation party. I was brought out and placed on the table which had been enlarged to seat the guests. It was the most festive evening the furniture and I had seen since she was brought home as a baby.

It's hard to believe that she's gone. I have seen her pass through this chamber in all the stages of her life. Now, I am on the table set for two. I think I overheard the Missus say that she thought it would be nice to have dinner where they would be surrounded by memories.

The Farmer

A farmer large and strong and bold
Braves the heat and then the cold.
He whose work is never done,
Still finds time to love his son.
He who fears a killer drought,
Has time to help a child out
On a wild far-fetched dream
Is gentle and so kind to deem
It as important as his work
Which he, of course, can never shirk.

Finders Keepers

Remember
the abandoned soul
once left in your possession
to do with as you pleased.
Tossed away carelessly
by an unloving heart,
my destiny
was to be shadowed by Doubt.
You recognized in my pain-inflicted eyes
that my character was razed
from the grief
imprinted on my being.
It was then conceived
that my life's future
was to be determined
only by you.
You kept me
instead of sending me away.
You placed within me
a new embryo of trust to replace the debris of loneliness
borne unto me.
For so long,
my soul yearned for protection
never priviledged
to me before.
Now,
I treasure our Relationship that surely
God has committed with
His Blessings.
It will get stronger with,
rather than
wither from, time.
Even now,
the memories of good
along with nightmares of the bad
will linger on inside of me.
Because of my naiveté
and infantile mind
I am compelled to repute them and cherish them,
that pain
will never subside.
But with your help,
they can be
momentarily forgotten.
What love remains within me still,
I have
reserved for you.
For
"Finder's Keepers" gave me
the courage and sanguine
I thought were defeated
in subdued battle.
Thank you
for accepting me
to be
Your Shadow, My Brother.

He was found by his parents to be
One who was normal and loved to be free.
He liked being active and was always on the run,
Looking for new ways to have some fun.
When he wanted his way, he was a persister,
And he enjoyed arguing with his older sister.
As a small child, he acted like a devil,
But he always kept his grades at a high level.
Throughout the years of his normal childhood,
He obtained friends, as many as he could.
He loved to be outdoors and was rarely home;
Throughout his neighborhood he would roam.
The school thought his grades were adequate enough
So they let him go to high school where easy changes to rough.
Elementary and junior high school had been easy for him
But when he entered high school, things started to look grim.
Upperclassmen look on freshmen as though they're immature,
So when he started high school, he felt insecure.
By the end of the school year his fear was gone;
He was no longer a freshman, it was time to move on.
His life was as normal as it could be,
But he wasn't perfect, as you can see.

At the top of the mountain, one must look down to see,
The crisp, white snow among the green trees.
The flowers have all been hidden by the golden, soft snow.
A tingling thought is brought to mind of a fire's glow.
The impossible lies ahead.
The twists and turns every one of us would dread.
The moguls and close placement of trees
Bring a thought of bruised arms and knees.
As tough and difficult as the mountain may seem,
To arrive safely at the bottom is the skier's dream.

Like a classic book, my cover doesn't shine.
The story on my pages though, is uniquely mine.
Read me through and learn my characters and plot;
You'll know all that I want you to and some that I do not.
And when we've been together time enough to tell,
Perhaps you'll take your pen, and my empty pages fill.

"Will the Real Audra Murphy Please Stand Up"

She woke and glided neatly into her daily routine. That, at least, was normal. She made her bed, showered, and got dressed in that order, as usual. She serenely ate her breakfast of lukewarm oatmeal, then departed to catch her bus for Wellsley College at eight sharp.

Her name was Audra Murphy, a tall, pretty blonde who was very intelligent — and knew it. She liked things orderly; she liked to have everything in its place — including people. She rarely dated, though not through lack of callers. She could have been popular and well liked had she not held herself so aloof.

She arrived at the bus stop, punctual of course. The bus arrived late, of course. She boarded the bus and returned the driver's cheerful smile with a cold, calculated stretching of the lips. She placed her fifty cents in the meter and sat down in the only available seat, across from an unshaven and disheveled man who reeked of alcohol and next to a child of perhaps six or seven.

The bus started with a jerk. They rolled out onto the open highway, out into the morning snarl of cars, trucks, motorcycles and still more cars.

Audra was absorbed in trying to decide which lab to do in chemistry when she realized that everyone in the bus was silent except for one man who was speaking in a loud, rough manner. She glanced up and froze in horror. There in the front of the bus stood that man — that bum who had been sitting across from her only a moment ago. And there in his hand, no it couldn't be!, was a gun. His words grated against Audra's ears.

"Anybody does anything stupid and the driver's brain gets plastered all over the whole damn highway — got it?!"

Audra trembled visibly. The child in the seat next to her began to whimper. This tiny sound somehow struck a chord within that part of Audra which had long been silent. She slowly took the child in her arms and held her. This, perhaps, was the first loving gesture she had performed since Karen ... But no, this was not the time to be puzzling over feelings refound.

That man, that crazy hijacker, was telling the driver something. The words chilled Audra to the bone for they were just like something from an old movie, the kind you watch at 11:30 on windy nights. "You just get me to the airport as fast as this heap will go — so move it, damn it!"

If Audra was scared before, she was terrified now. For here he was, sauntering down the isle, swaying with the motion of the bus. He stopped directly in front of them.

"Gimme the kid," he growled. The child stiffened in Audra's arms. Audra drew in a sharp breath — her mind was reeling.

"No," her only thought was that the little girl looked just like Karen, her younger sister who had been killed in an auto accident two years ago. "Leave her alone; take me instead." A little corner of her mind said "Fool!", but it was silenced by a wave of emotion followed by a monsoon of fear.

The man reflected a moment, suspicion evident in his dark eyes. All in a moment his arm grasped Audra's in a biting grip and yanked her out of the seat. "Come on, get up here — and you'd better not try anything funny."

Audra stumbled up the lurching aisle, conscious of the frightened eyes of the other passengers and the cold, hard presence of the gun on her back.

All too soon the bus was at the airport and Audra was forced to run through the airport and board a plane. Her only thought was, "I've saved Karen. I've saved Karen."

Six weeks later Brazilian police had captured the hijacker and upon his confession they searched a hotel room. They found Audra. She had saved Karen. Now she was with Karen.

I know you'll never believe me when I till you this, but I'll give it a try anyway. Yesterday, while I was cruising through Harlem (don't ask me why), I was stopped by a gang of blacks. At first, I thought it was a holdup. But, as I stopped, some of them walked over to my side of the car, one stayed in the front, and three scampered onto my hood. I really didn't know what to think and I was speechless. Then suddenly, they all began to dance and sing. At first it seemed as though they were a little on the high side of things; however, except for their shaking their booties in the vicinity of my car, they seemed normal. A white man then walked up, tapped on my car window, and I rolled it down. I expected to see him pull out a gun and hear myself scream, but he just asked me how I was doing. To my astonishment, he told me that he was the director of a movie, and that behind the doors of the van in front of me was a movie camera. He then waved his hand and the doors opened to reveal the camera. I said yes when he offered me $100 to drive up again. Imagine me, a "movie star."

A Cry for Help

He let the report slip gently from his hands and land softly on his desk.

Sergeant Thomas Bayor, Age 35
Height: 6'1" Weight: 220
Time of Death: Approximately 2:35 a.m. November 25, 1980
Cause of Death: Repeated blows to the neck and chest by a sharp object.
Weapon: Unknown

He rubbed his damp brow with a quivering palm as he tried to combat the rank fluid of fear and despair that began to bubble in the pit of his stomach.

She had been right! She had known! Together, they could have saved him! But he hadn't believed. If only he had believed her.

His mind returned to the first moment that he had met her. He had looked up and was surprised to see a young woman standing before his desk. He was struck immediately by her beauty.

But it had been obvious that she was nervous and uncomfortable with the silence and was afraid to speak first, so he did.

"Yes?"

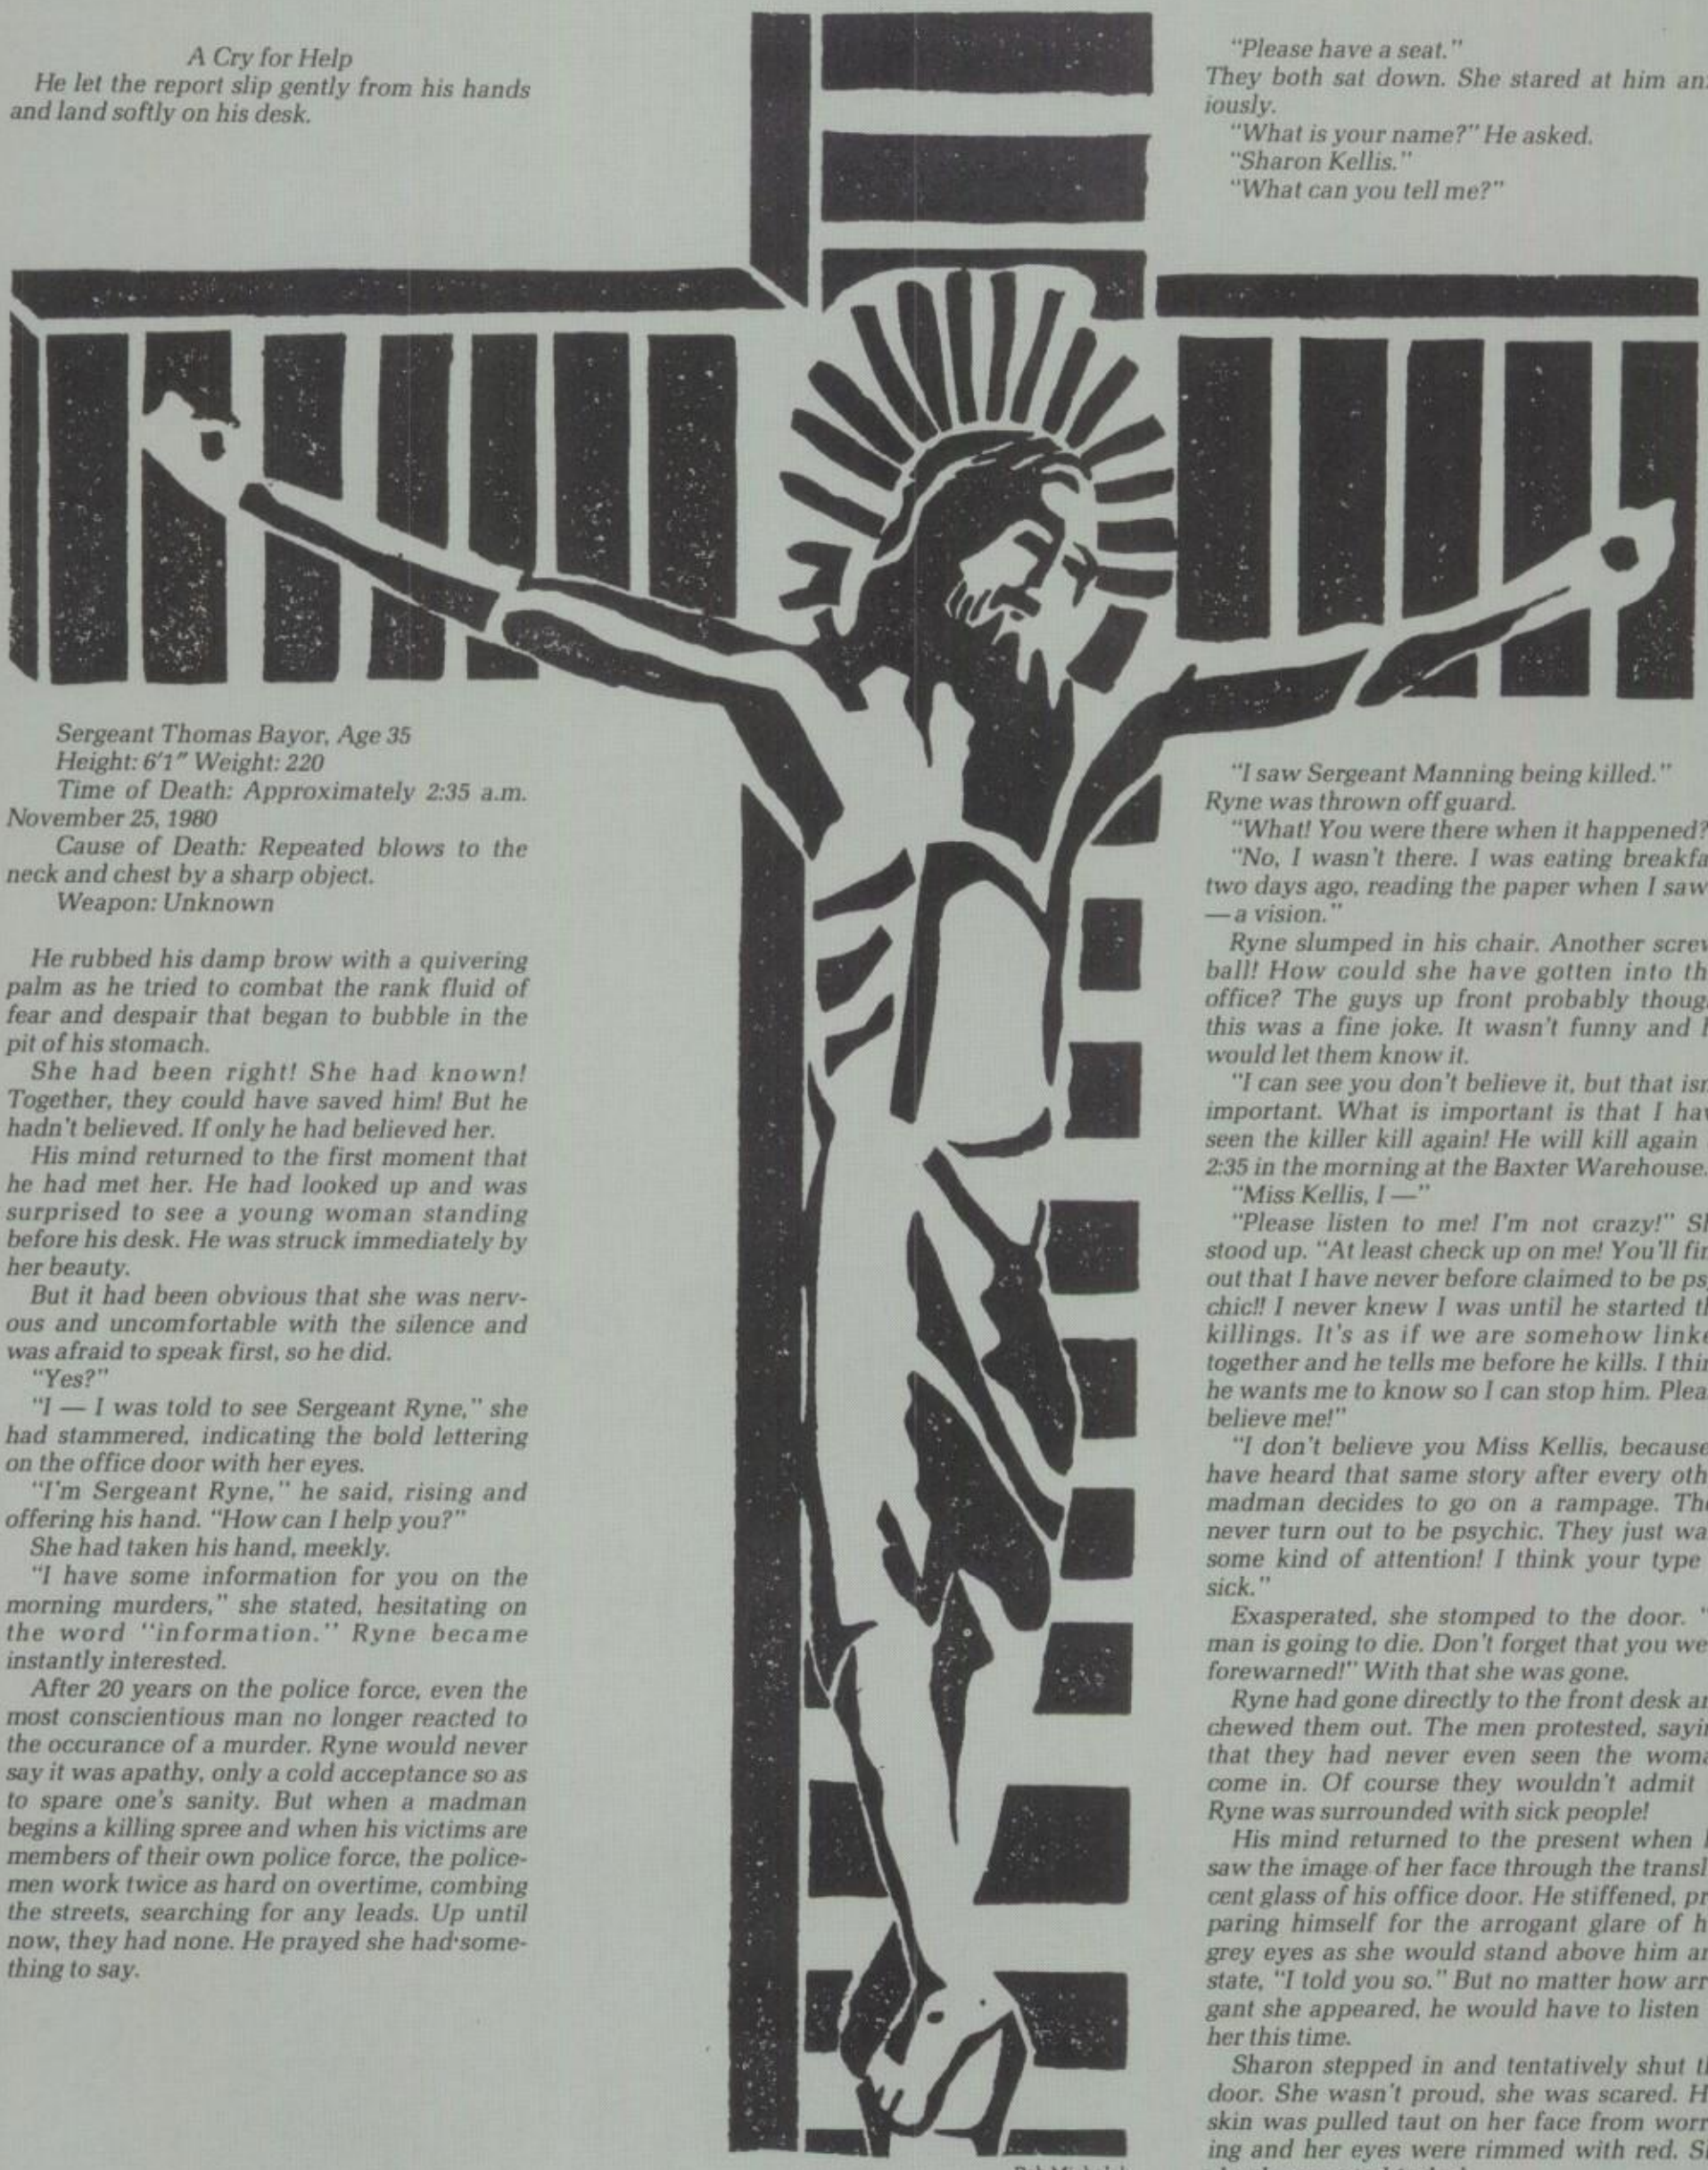
"I — I was told to see Sergeant Ryne," she had stammered, indicating the bold lettering on the office door with her eyes.

"I'm Sergeant Ryne," he said, rising and offering his hand. "How can I help you?"

She had taken his hand, meekly.

"I have some information for you on the morning murders," she stated, hesitating on the word "information." Ryne became instantly interested.

After 20 years on the police force, even the most conscientious man no longer reacted to the occurance of a murder. Ryne would never say it was apathy, only a cold acceptance so as to spare one's sanity. But when a madman begins a killing spree and when his victims are members of their own police force, the policemen work twice as hard on overtime, combing the streets, searching for any leads. Up until now, they had none. He prayed she had something to say.



Bob Michalek

"Please have a seat."
They both sat down. She stared at him anxiously.
"What is your name?" He asked.
"Sharon Kellis."
"What can you tell me?"

"I saw Sergeant Manning being killed."
Ryne was thrown off guard.
"What! You were there when it happened?"
"No, I wasn't there. I was eating breakfast two days ago, reading the paper when I saw a — a vision."

Ryne slumped in his chair. Another screwball! How could she have gotten into this office? The guys up front probably thought this was a fine joke. It wasn't funny and he would let them know it.

"I can see you don't believe it, but that isn't important. What is important is that I have seen the killer kill again! He will kill again at 2:35 in the morning at the Baxter Warehouse."
"Miss Kellis, I —"
"Please listen to me! I'm not crazy!" She stood up. "At least check up on me! You'll find out that I have never before claimed to be psychic!! I never knew I was until he started the killings. It's as if we are somehow linked together and he tells me before he kills. I think he wants me to know so I can stop him. Please believe me!"

"I don't believe you Miss Kellis, because I have heard that same story after every other madman decides to go on a rampage. They never turn out to be psychic. They just want some kind of attention! I think your type is sick."

Exasperated, she stomped to the door. "A man is going to die. Don't forget that you were forewarned!" With that she was gone.

Ryne had gone directly to the front desk and chewed them out. The men protested, saying that they had never even seen the woman come in. Of course they wouldn't admit it. Ryne was surrounded with sick people!

His mind returned to the present when he saw the image of her face through the translucent glass of his office door. He stiffened, preparing himself for the arrogant glare of her grey eyes as she would stand above him and state, "I told you so." But no matter how arrogant she appeared, he would have to listen to her this time.

Sharon stepped in and tentatively shut the door. She wasn't proud, she was scared. Her skin was pulled taut on her face from worrying and her eyes were rimmed with red. She slowly came to his desk.

"Did it happen?" Her voice was barely audible. Ryne softened. She really was frightened. He went to her and helped her to the chair.

"Don't you know?"

"I couldn't read the paper." She began to cry. He tried to comfort her, embarrased by having a woman cry in front of him.

"Who? When?" she asked between sobs.

"It happened when you said it would. I'm sorry I said what I did. This killer has put me under a lot of stress. The last man that was killed was a friend of mine. He left a message for me saying that he had a lead on the killings, but he didn't say what it was. If I had only believed you, I could have stopped him! Please forget the way I treated you before and help me. We have to stop whoever is doing this.

"How?" she asked, drying her eyes.

"Did you have another vision this morning?"

"No, I told you, I was afraid to read the paper."

Ryne scanned the room, trying to get an idea as to what to do next. His eyes fell to the report on Bayor. He reached for it.

"On the second page is a description of the scene of the crime. It could help you to see your vision. But, I won't let you read it unless you're sure that you can handle the details about his death."

"I can read it, but I'm not sure if I will see anything about the killer or his next victims. I have no way of controlling my visions."

"Please try!" He handed her the report. She flipped the top sheet and began reading the second page.

He stared at her face intently as she read, searching for any change in her face. She neared the end of the report with no change. It wasn't going to work, he thought. What do we do now?

He froze. She was staring at him. The muscles of her face were totally relaxed and her eyes vacant. It reminded Ryne of a face from the dead. He was afraid. What was he supposed to do?

She began to mumble to herself. He strained to understand what she was saying.

"I became afraid." She stared, blankly, listening to a voice that only she could hear. "Don't make me, please." There was no emotion in her voice.

"Where are you?" Ryne asked.

"In a hall. It's dark and so quiet, oh so quiet!" Her face became more animated. "I'm frightened. Let's go back!"

"What's at the end of the hall?"

"A door. I don't want to go in there. But I must. I must stop him: He's not in here! It's just a room with no furniture in it, except for a full length mirror on the wall. He's not here! Yes he is," she hissed. "He's here. I can feel him!" She screamed and leaped from her seat.

Ryne fell back.

"No, go away!" she cried.

Ryne recovered from his shock and stopped her before she ran out the door.

"Stop it! Stop it!" She began pounding his chest in a rhythmic motion, as if she were stabbing someone. Ryne shuddered, his skin pulled tight across his body and the hair on the nape of his neck raised.

"Stop it! Stop it!! God, please, why can't I just die!" She collapsed. Ryne helped her to her seat.

The door opened. Ryne jumped as if he had been caught doing something wrong. A familiar face peered in.

"Everything alright?"

"Everything's just fine, Tom. She just got a little emotional, that's all.

The man nodded. "Reminds me of a redhead I saw this morning." He was gone.

"What happened?" She said in a weak, drained voice.

"Don't you remember?"

Sharon leaned over and rubbed her temples.

"I don't remember anything. No, wait. I remember half of a building."

"What?"

She shrugged.

"I also remember an address and a time. 50012 Vont Street. Apt. 3C at 12:55 tonight."

"Anything else?"

"No, up to a certain point, I can't remember anything."

"That's alright, you did fine." Ryne said, patting her shoulder and then moving to his desk.

"What are you going to do now?"

"Look up your building."

"And then?"

"And then if there is something at that address, then I'm going there."

"Tonight?" She stood up, frightened.

"That's when he'll be there."

"Take me along! Please don't make me wait again at home, alone, wondering if at that moment someone could be getting killed. Please don't let me go through that hell again!!"

"Alright, but you will stay in the car."

She was both relieved and surprised that he gave in so quickly.

He picked her up at 10:45. They exchanged solemn greetings and then rode for quite some time without speaking. Neither could believe they were going to do what they were going to do. And they both worried about what could go wrong.

Sharon finally spoke. "Sergeant Ryne."

"Bob."

She smiled nervously. "Bob, I've been thinking this afternoon about my visions. What happened today, with me remembering only the beginning, happens every time. Just when I sense that I am about to know who the killer is everything goes black. Why can't I remember who the killer is? I want to."

"Well, this is my first experience with anyone like you. No offense, but I think your mind makes you forget as a way of protection."

"Protection? From what?"

"As I was listening to you go through your trance, it sounded to me like you took the part of the victim and it was such a traumatic experience that you had to forget it."

Sharon thought about what he had said. Was he right? Did she play the part of the victim? Something nagged in the back of her brain.

At 11:30 the car came to a stop. Ryne turned off the motor and the lights.

"There's your half of a building." he said pointing across the street.

Shrouded in darkness, on the corner of a poorly lit and badly paved road, was the rubble of an old hotel. A wrecking crew had already taken a large chunk out of the building, but half still remained.

"Make sure the doors are locked. Keep the windows closed and the lights off."

She nodded O.K.

He got out and then added, "Don't let anyone in except me. I've left a message with a friend of mine at the station, Tom Trowers, to come down here as soon as he can. Don't leave the car until he comes. When he does tell him to come up after me. I may need some help. Understand?"

"Be careful."

He was gone.

She waited alone in the silent darkness. What if the killer wasn't in the building, but standing somewhere in the shadows? Sharon knew that he would be able to sense her just like she could sense him. She slumped deeper into her seat. Beyond the window she could see a black, gaping space in the building. In her mind's eye, she envisioned the killer peering down at her with a devilish grin, knowing that at last she was coming to him. "It seems you play the part of the victim." She couldn't stand to be alone with her thoughts anymore. She had to get away!

Ryne slowly ascended the narrow stairs, stepping carefully to avoid making too much noise as he stepped on the plaster that littered the floor. Apt. 3C. That meant he would have to go to the third floor. With each step he took, he became more tense. As he neared the third landing, he remembered the madman in "Psycho" bearing down on his victim, his eyes wide with insanity and waving an unnaturally long knife over his head. Like that victim, Ryne would have little time to react before the cold blade would be driven into soft warm tissues of his brain.

He reached the landing and entered a hall. The only light came from behind a door hung on one hinge. The room beyond was partially destroyed, allowing the moonlight to come in.

Slowly and cautiously, Ryne advanced down the hall. He had to remain calm, steady and alert, ready for any sudden attack. But no matter what he told himself, his hands shook and his heart pounded wildly in his ears. A foot scraped the floor behind him. He whirled around, aiming his gun at a figure crouched at the stair exit.

"It's me," a voice whispered.

The figure crept toward him until the light from beyond the caved-in door reflected on soft grey eyes that were large and clear with fright.

He hurried to Sharon's side.

"What are you doing in here?"

"I couldn't stand to be alone. I thought he knew where I was and was coming for me. I became so frightened!"

"It's dangerous for you to be here. You had better go."

"Don't make me, please!"

She clutched him tightly.

He noticed that she had brought her purse with her and thought it funny that even at moments like this, a woman didn't forget to bring her purse.

"Stay behind me and if anything happens, run!"

She nodded solemnly and loosened her hold.

They made their way to the end of the hall and came to the last closed door. 3C appeared faintly in the darkness. Ryne pushed her behind him and encircled the knob with his hand.

"I'm frightened. Let's go back!" Sharon pleaded.

He didn't hear her. His eyes were intent on the door knob. It turned easily. It wasn't locked. Quickly, in a manner well rehearsed, he flung open the door, crouched down and aimed his gun into the room. Nothing stirred. For several long, quiet seconds neither moved until their eyes grew acquainted to the darkness. When they did they revealed an empty room without furniture.

Ryne motioned Sharon to stay where she was and then entered the room. The air was stale and thick with dust. The window had been boarded up. There was only one other door in the room. He opened it in the same manner that he opened the other one, only not as drastically.

After searching every closet and corner until he was sure the killer was not hiding, he returned to the main room. Sharon stood fearfully just within the doorway. Ryne motioned her to go into the other room. As he did, he saw a full length mirror. He walked over to it. Everything she had said had come true. The building, the empty hotel room and the mirror. Now, all that had to be seen was if she was right about the time, 12:55. His digital watch indicated 12:45. All they could do now was wait for the killer. He probably had befriended his victim and had found some way of getting him here. It should be easy to apprehend the killer. But, one thing bothered him. What if he had interpreted Sharon's vision incorrectly. What if she, actually, was going to be the next victim?

Sharon hadn't seen his gesture to go into the other room. She was lost in her confused frightened thoughts. He isn't here! Where is he? She was sure he would be in here. A wave of nausea swept over her. He had been with her all the time, waiting for the right moment. Oh God, help me! I have no protection! She wanted to scream but couldn't. Her mind reeled. She became dizzy. I mustn't black out. Then I would be totally defenseless! Her hand fumbled inside of her purse for something that she could fight back with. Adrenalin flooded her brain. She would survive.

Ryne looked up from his watch and saw her face in the mirror. It seemed to have been completely transformed. Her lips were pulled back, revealing her teeth. Her eyes had become spheres of frozen granite. He knew he had been wrong. The killer was SHE. And Sharon didn't play the part of the victim; she played the killer!

She lurched at him and with the skill of experience, aimed her tiny steel weapon where it would do the most damage. There was no time for him to react before she embedded it into his neck. His neck snapped back. Sharon jabbed it deeper into his spinal column, twisted it savagely and then jerked it out.

It seemed to Ryne as though he were falling in slow motion while a million thoughts rushed through his mind. Probably has befriended his victim . . . I think your mind makes you forget as a way of protection. Protection? . . . It is as if we are somehow linked together . . . He wants me to know so I can stop him. Please believe, please help me! Stop it! God, please why can't I just die?"

His head struck the floor. She pounced on him and began to stab at his chest. His head rolled so that he could see her in the mirror. Her eyes were inflamed with joy. Her mouth was set in a cunning smirk and her hair lay crooked on her head, revealing blonde strands underneath that had been chopped close to her head. He tried to shut his eyes, but he seemed to have lost control of even that simple movement. Oh God, don't make me have to watch!! Something warm splashed across his face. Tiny droplets of a thick dark fluid appeared on the mirror. He could feel no pain, only a dull poking, as if a doctor were probing a wound that wasn't fully under the influence of novocaine. Why wasn't he dying? His mind screamed.

Her arms and face were streaked with his blood. She abandoned her weapon and began to use her hands. Finally, his heart was damaged. She dug her hands into his torn flesh and pulled them out, enjoying the feeling, as shredded strips of muscle and skin slid through her fingers. The last sound that Bob Ryne heard was her wild, victorious laugh as she raised her blood-drenched hands toward the heavens. The last sight he saw was her putting her hands in her mouth.

By the time it was morning, the weak, insecure personality of Sharon Kellis had died away like the many others before her; and with her, all memory of Bob Ryne. It was Sara Kelly's chance now, a strong-willed redhead who was concerned about a number of visions she had been having. She would wake up in the morning and find her steel fingernail file broken and twisted, covered by a color of red fingernail polish that she never used. She would throw it away and make a mental note to buy another one. Then she would bring in the newspaper. She would stop before she entered the house. Splashed across the front page would be a detailed account of the latest murder. The multilation of the body was far worse than any of the others and the police suspected that some cannibalism might have been involved. Memories would come, but the hidden killer inside her would cleverly trick her into believing that they were only a vision.

She needed help desperately! She prayed that Sergeant Trowers would listen to her now. Sara had visited him the other morning, before she had another one of her mysterious blackouts.

Later that morning she would leave. The feeling that the killer somehow knew who she was would prompt her to move secretly. So secretly, that not even the men at the front desk would see her enter the police station. But, despite her precautions, the killer would go with her.

The Wizard and the Sorceress

Coming up upon a south wind,
He only traveled in the night,
Soaring through the heavens,
He saw the arctic lights.
The crystal ice crunched quietly
When he did touch down,
It was the only thing that you could hear
As his feet brushed on the ground.
He stood before the frozen castle
Of the Sorceress of the North;
Opening the icy gateways,
She beckoned him come forth.
She knew his visit was important,
And its need had no debate:
There was to be a contest
Spawned from rivalry and hate.
"I welcome you, my wizard,
But in my mind there is no doubt,
For I've awaited this a long time,
My brother from the south."
"I only came to duel with you
Because there was a need.
You may even claim victory, witch,
But not before you bleed."
The smile fell from her face,
Her lips grew tight and thin,
She glared down from her icy throne,
"Then let the war begin!"
With those words they found themselves
In a desert of frozen white sands,
The wizard stood there helplessly;
A string of thorns had bound his hands.
The Sorceress sneered, "Have you lost
Before the battle has begun?"
But the wizard, now behind her,
whispered,
"You have far from won."
The fury then broke loose;
Hatred began to flare,
Lightning flung from fingertips
Went shrieking through the air.
The battle raged on for hours
Showing no signs of cease,
But not until one of them was dead
Could the other live in peace.
The Sorceress then stopped the battle
By standing frozen still.
Her steel blue eyes that stared at him
Were waiting for the kill.
She fell into deep meditation,
Her body glowed a blinding blue,
The wizard, now exhausted, wept
For there was nothing he could do.
He had known when he began
The superiority of her power,
The ice blew up from around his feet
And entombed him in a tower.
When it was completed,
She fell back laughing in the snow.
But while she wasn't looking,
The tower began to glow.
Huge cracks formed in the structure,
Blocks of ice came thundering down,
Which buried alive the Sorceress,
Still laughing on the ground.
The wizard then lay down to die,
For the battle he'd not won,
But if he could not claim victory,
Then victory belonged to none . . .
The arctic lights shone brightly
Off to the east and west,
The sky became filled with stars
As the day came to a rest.
The battle had raged all the day
Never to be seen or heard,
and so I pose this question:
Did the war occur?

CLUBS & ACADEMICS

What do you do with the extra time on your hands? A majority of Uni's students spend it participating in extracurricular activities here on campus. You can find them out cycling on the open road or out in the mountains slaloming down the slopes with the cold wind beating against their faces.

Others spend their time in service to the school, helping to organize activities, keeping us informed of school happenings, and boosting school spirit.

Still others will use their time trying to tackle mind-boggling problems or games.

Whatever the case, the people that join clubs here at Uni are putting their time to good use by gaining more abilities to do things they enjoy in the company of others, and having fun while doing it.

JESTERS ARE SUPERLATIVE

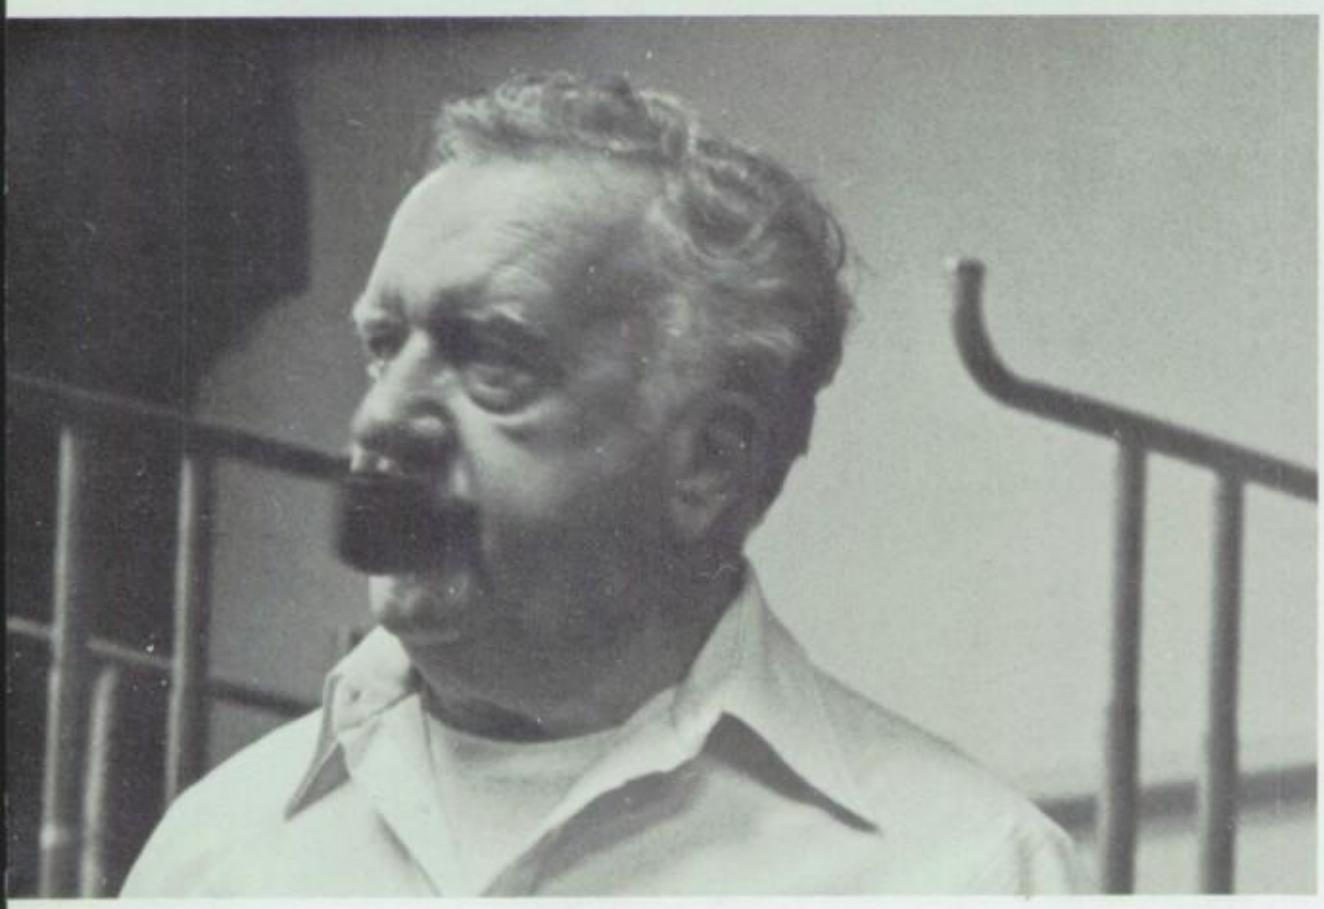
The Jesters exists as a club of superlatives: it is the oldest on campus and has the most experienced moderator. Father Leo Lanphier founded the Jesters as the first club at Uni in 1957 and has been moderator ever since. And the list continues: most active, one of the largest, most talented, funniest.

Since moving back to the Little Theater on Campus last year, the Jesters have had nothing but financial successes. With the proceeds from this year's productions, the group purchased four liturgical vestments, one for each play, to be used in school Masses and in the chapel.

Each Jester must work 32 hours in the acting, business, or design elements of drama, giving the Jesters the most exclusive membership on campus. Still, these high standards haven't deterred new people from joining.

"We wanted to give the Jesters a more open atmosphere, and it has attracted new members," said President Theresa Brazier. Members now number about 35. A quarter of these have also logged in the required 100 hours for the International Thespian Society, a national dramatic organization. In addition to the three plays highlighted here, they presented "Hullabullo," Fr. Lanphier's own musical comedy, in April.

"CURIOUS SAVAGE" HILARIOUS COMEDY



October's "The Curious Savage," marked by some of the finest comedic performances Uni had ever seen, made the Jesters their largest profit ever, according to President Theresa Brazier.

An eccentric widow (Kathryn Schorr) has been giving her husband's millions to anyone who wants them. To make her stop, her greedy children (played by Mike Cooney, Garry Faucher, and Beth Goscienski) commit her to an asylum. Although sane, she befriends its hilarious and harmless inmates (Mark Bouterie, Theresa Brazier, Androna Calles, Doug Moore, and Eve Selis) and with the help of the good doctor and his assistant (John Dolan and Mary Rice) foils her children's plot to seize the money.

SHOTS AND SCREAMS ENLIVEN "THE TAVERN"

The Jesters tried their hand at comic melodrama with "The Tavern" in December. Greg George as the witty vagabond led the large cast through a plot laden with shots, screams and blackouts. The crotchety inn keeper (Mike Cooney) and his love-smitten son and tavern girl (Gary Faucher and Theresa Smith) are beside themselves when the governor (Bill Zepf) and his family (Theresa Brazier, Elaine Warren and John Watson) wander in after being robbed on the road. Finally the evil sheriff (Doug Moore) is revealed as the culprit. The cheerful vagabond's sudden disappearance after being unmasked as an asylum escapee ends the play on a mysterious note.

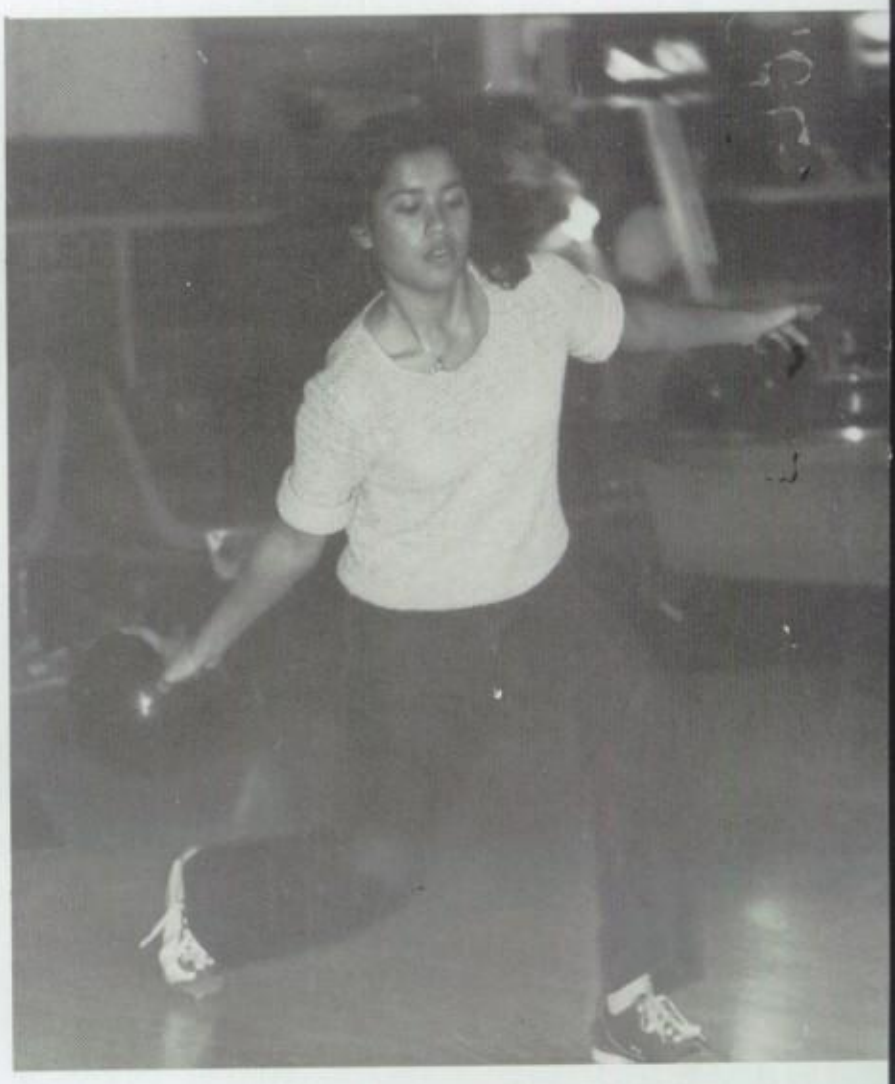
"MURDER" DELIGHTFULLY SOPHISTICATED

Below: Androna Calles makes the momentous decision to face punishment rather than commit suicide. Left: Androna weeps and Theresa Smith and John Dolan are shocked after she shoots her ex-fiance, Dan Farney, in the leg; Chris DaRosa (r) is skeptical as Androna pleads her innocence to Dan and Theresa.

Agatha Christie's sophisticated "Murder on the Nile" delighted February theater goers with its puzzling plot and quick wit. Greg George as a canon-turned-sleuth and Androna Calles as a vengeful woman turned in superior performances. Honeymooners Kelly Harrington and Dan Farney were superb, as was Theresa Brazier as the delightfully haughty Miss ffoliot-ffolkes. John Dolan, Beth Goscienski, Chris DaRosa and Theresa Smith rounded out the fine cast.

BOWLING CLUB SET FOR STRIKES



With having fun and developing skills in mind, the Bowling Club encouraged many of Uni's bowlers to join in and improve their bowling techniques. Beginning in October and continuing through March, the club met regularly on Wednesdays at Frontier Lanes. Coordinated by Mrs. Theresa Rizzo, and led by President Steve Kemp, the members formed eight teams, which consisted of three bowlers on each team, and competed against each other in the quest for "strikes and spares."

EL CID STIRS CONTROVERSY

Editors: Joe Proal, Business; Bill Zepf, Opinions; Dan Otto, Features; Tim Howe, Editor-in-Chief; Mandy Lopez, Sports; Ann Miller, News.

Unlike the past editions of El Cid, this year's newspaper has taken a political point of view. When Moderator Nancy Donovan was asked what she will remember most about El Cid, she replied that she will never forget the controversy the paper has caused.

Commenting on the controversy, Editor Tim Howe said, "Newspapers are by nature controversial because someone is bound to disagree with opinions expressed." He added that he thought it was important that the paper allowed people to express their opinions before the entire school.

Though the newspaper was not very organized at first, they made improvements very rapidly. According to Ms. Donovan, this was because, "We were able to meet deadlines, improve interviewing techniques, and feature more and more interesting articles."

One of the major difficulties that the paper experienced was the lack of student response. Though the paper has a big staff, it needed more letters from the students to the editor.

CYCLING CLUB

HITS THE OPEN ROAD

Faster than a speeding skateboard, more powerful than a raging moped, able to ride a 400 mile tour in a single week . . . Look, out in the bike lane! It's a herd, it's a train, NO! It's — it's the Uni-Cycles.

Disguised as mild mannered University High students, the Cycling Club fights the never ending battle for room, recognition, and the right of way.

Wishing to become better informed and more experienced in the sports of cycle touring and racing, the Cycling Club pedaled 25 miles up the coast every weekend. During Christmas vacation, club members took a six day, 400 mile ride to Palm Springs and Hemet. "The rides were hard," said club president Mika Cutting, "but more importantly, we enjoyed ourselves despite the difficulty."

Back Row: Steve Giesing, Moderator Dana Shelburne, Lee Sampsell, John Pabst, Frank Schanberger, Mika Cutting, Bill Myles, Peter Moons, Brian Keves, Jim Smith.

SKI CLUB SLALOMS DOWN SLOPES

THE SKI CLUB

Art by Mika Cutting

For the members of the Ski Club, there's no better way to spend a weekend than hitting the slopes of Mammoth or Snow Summit. The club members plan for any weekend when the weather is good for skiing, but this season there wasn't much snow and they have only taken eight trips. There are about 140 Ski Club members, three times as many as there were last year. They enjoyed the trips, organized by the Boy Scouts of America Ski Explorer Post. Moderator Mrs. Prather invites all Uni skiers to join as the Ski Club's members range in skill from beginners to advanced.

SQUADS SPARK SPIRIT

Filled with enthusiastic spirit, the J.V. Cheerleading squad got the teams fired up for the games and got the crowds rowdy. Led by Head-Cheerleader, Camille Selis, and Co-Head, Susie Deely, the squad showed a lot of talent and originality in their cheers, dances, and mounts. Together the whole squad made up the cheers and dances during their daily practices.

We are the best . . . We are the U.H.S.
No matter what they say,
We'll do it the Dons way . . .
Red machine, it is up to you . . .
We're gonna win, that's what we're gonna do!!!

Pulling each member's distinguishing qualities together to make a team was the key to the freshmen cheerleading squad's success. Head cheerleader Maria Close's leadership and Ann Kankowski's positive attitude contributed to the squad's coherence. Co-head cheerleader Casey Connors wrote many of the cheers while everyone helped choreograph routines and voted on the best moves. Lori Fratarcangelo, loudest of the cheerleaders, made sure the fans heard every word, and Becky Byron and Sally Hayes added fresh excitement with their gymnastics ability.

These vivacious spirit boosters look forward to trying out the positions on next year's JV squad.

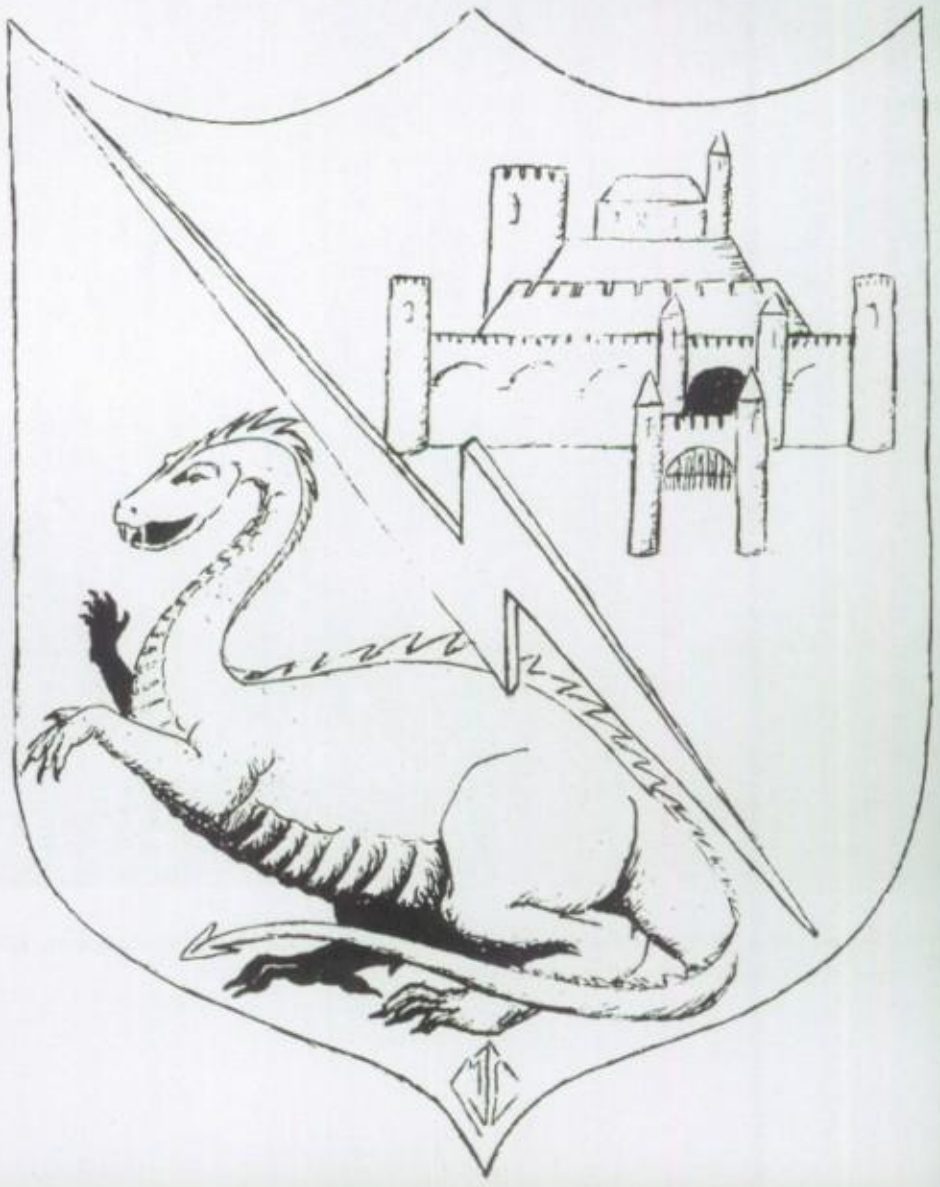
DUNGEONS & DRAGONS CLUB

Standing: John Covell, David Wilhelmy, Paul Azarewicz, Arthur Stephens, Steve Covell, Paul Manderfeld. Sitting: Jack Livingstone.

Besides being able to live in a fantasy world of elves, witches, warlocks, kings, and queens, the members of the Dungeons and Dragons Club also developed their creativity, imagination, originality, and their skills in acting, writing, and reading.

Dungeons and Dragons has been popularized by college students and now, many high school students are joining the crowd, mostly because adults cannot find enough time to play the game. Playing the game itself takes about four hours; other preparations, such as writing the adventure, take another extra hour.

The dungeonmaster writes the adventure and each member plays the part of one of the characters. As they go through the adventure, dice are rolled to determine their fate.



The few but competent chess players on campus met four times a week during lunch to form the Chess Club. Not seeking publicity, they had a good time.

"It's pretty straightforward," said President Gerry Fenech, "We just go in and play chess."

The Club held tournaments among themselves to determine club champion and also showed competitive spirit in a match against Bishops. With a winning score of 13-1, "just going in and playing chess" certainly paid off.

COUNCIL REPRESENTS STUDENTS

At the beginning of the school year, each homeroom elected a delegate to the Student Council. This council had a lot of power because it represented the whole student body.

They held meetings twice a month, and during these meetings they discussed the different activities on and off campus that were coming up and also anything that the Council wanted to improve. The delegates who wanted something to be done about school policies or schedules introduced the subject and the Council voted on it at the next meeting.

Though the Council passed activities and policy changes such as Spirit Week and the shortened Friday schedule, these also had to go through the ASB to be voted on. Likewise, anything that went through the ASB had to also be approved by the Student Council.

CSF AND NHS RECOGNIZE ACADEMIC EXCELLENCE

One hundred and twenty applications were filed at the beginning of each semester for membership in the California Scholarship Federation, an organization on campus which recognized those who excel in academic subjects. Eligibility was based on ten academic points (A's were three points and B's one) with no unsatisfactory marks in conduct. Lifetime membership was achieved by completing four semesters — at least one in the senior year.

The benefits of life membership are eligibility for scholarships throughout California and a special gold seal on the diploma. Membership in CSF helps students in their college application.

The more exclusive National Honor Society requires a GPA of 3.0 or above and involvement in extracurricular activities and community service. Granted only by the Dean and class moderators after student application, membership cannot be regained once it is lost.

Fifteen percent of the seniors, 10% of the juniors, and 5% of the sophomores were selected.

CHORUS MAKES GOOD SHOWING 'FIRST TIME 'ROUND'

Kneeling: Joe Elliot, Bill Fallon, Elaine SanNicolas, Katheryn Fenick, John Dolan, Rachael Green, Elaine Warren, Dan Farney, Alfredo Balmaceda. Standing: Mr. David Brees, Mary Ross, Theresa Brazier, Jane Pflaum, Elaine Sebastian, Nancy Diller, Arcelia Tapia, Amy Butzen, Darla Hayes, Colleen Caulfield, Paula Contreras, Aide Hillman, Beth Brown, Janet Andersen, Mr. Bob Hart. Not Pictured: Rhonda Sawyer.

Do re mi fa sol la ti do! Everyday at E Block the harmonious sounds of the chorus drifted from the CC Center. And that was only practice!

Appropriately named, "First Time 'Round," Uni's first ever show chorus later performed at masses, assemblies and during Hunger Awareness Week. Their performance at Magic Mountain during Christmas vacation earned them an invitation to come back any time for a return engagement.

Many of the chorus' 25 members became interested in singing after appearing in last year's school musical "Oklahoma!" So they invited the music director of that production, Mr. David Brees, to come and lead the chorus. The highlight of the group's year was their "Broadway Spectacular" dinner show in March, which featured medleys from "Music Man," "Oliver," "Hello Dolly," "A Chorus Line," and "Annie."

NEW BAND TRUMPETS ARRIVAL

A drum roll please ... Taa Daaaa! Introducing University High's brand new Band. In its first year, the band certainly made a good impression. Even though the sixteen musicians were mixed from all four grades and ranged from rank beginners to those with seven years of experience, they were very compatible, showing that cooperation and hard work are prime ingredients in a fine band. Director David Brees' contagious enthusiasm brought the group together and dispelled their initial apprehension.

For a group in its first year, they have performed many times, both at school functions and in the community. They played for the Parent's Association, the Point Loma Christmas Parade, at Homecoming, assemblies and other football and basketball games.

There's talk of developing a marching band and drill team. How's that for moving up the scale?

Standing: Mr. David Brees, Jawad Masso, Michael Joseph, Joe Hicke, Adriana Tapia, Arcelia Tapia, Dwayne View, Glen Boyer, Bill Fallon. Kneeling: Betty Lachmayer, Antoinette DeVita, Andy Hawes, Elaine Anderson, Tina King, Jennifer Carlisle. Front: Renee Rauch, Tiffany Tripp.

PRESIDIO HELPS YOU REMEMBER THE GOOD TIMES

"Where's the grease pencil?" "Can you identify the second girl from the right in the third row?" "Let's break for lunch!" "What's a pica between friends?" "We can't use another picture of him! Crop him out of it." "Let's break for dinner!" "Is Buff Basketball finished yet?" "Let's break for breakfast?" "Tell you what, when Mr. Kerr comes in, we'll pretend like we thought our deadline was next week, and . . . oh, hi Mr. Kerr."

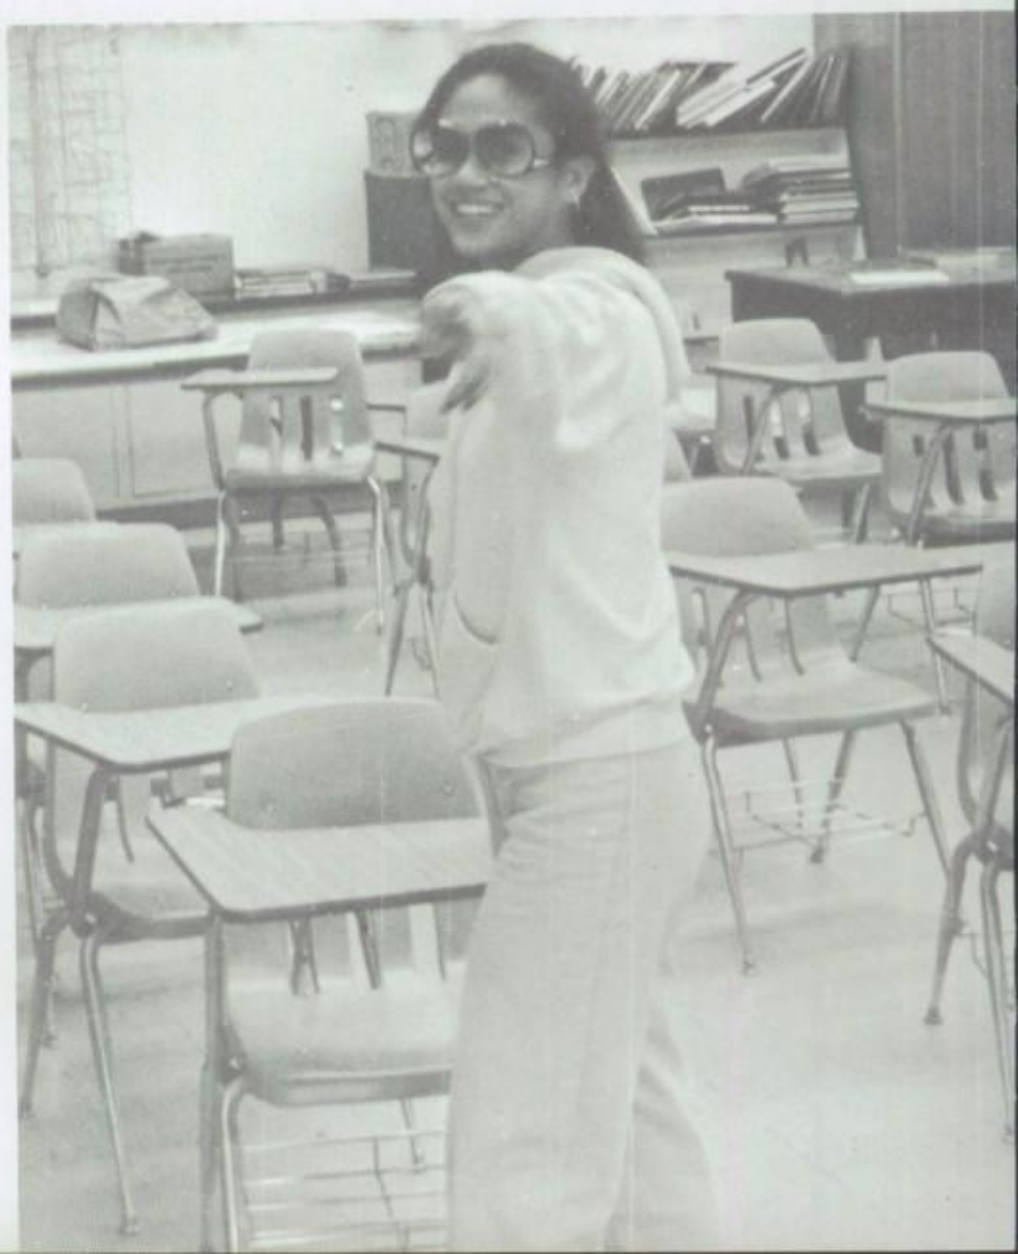
You hold in your hands the best of 1,527 prints, the final drafts of miles of copy and the condensed version of 248 bulging Quad-Paks.

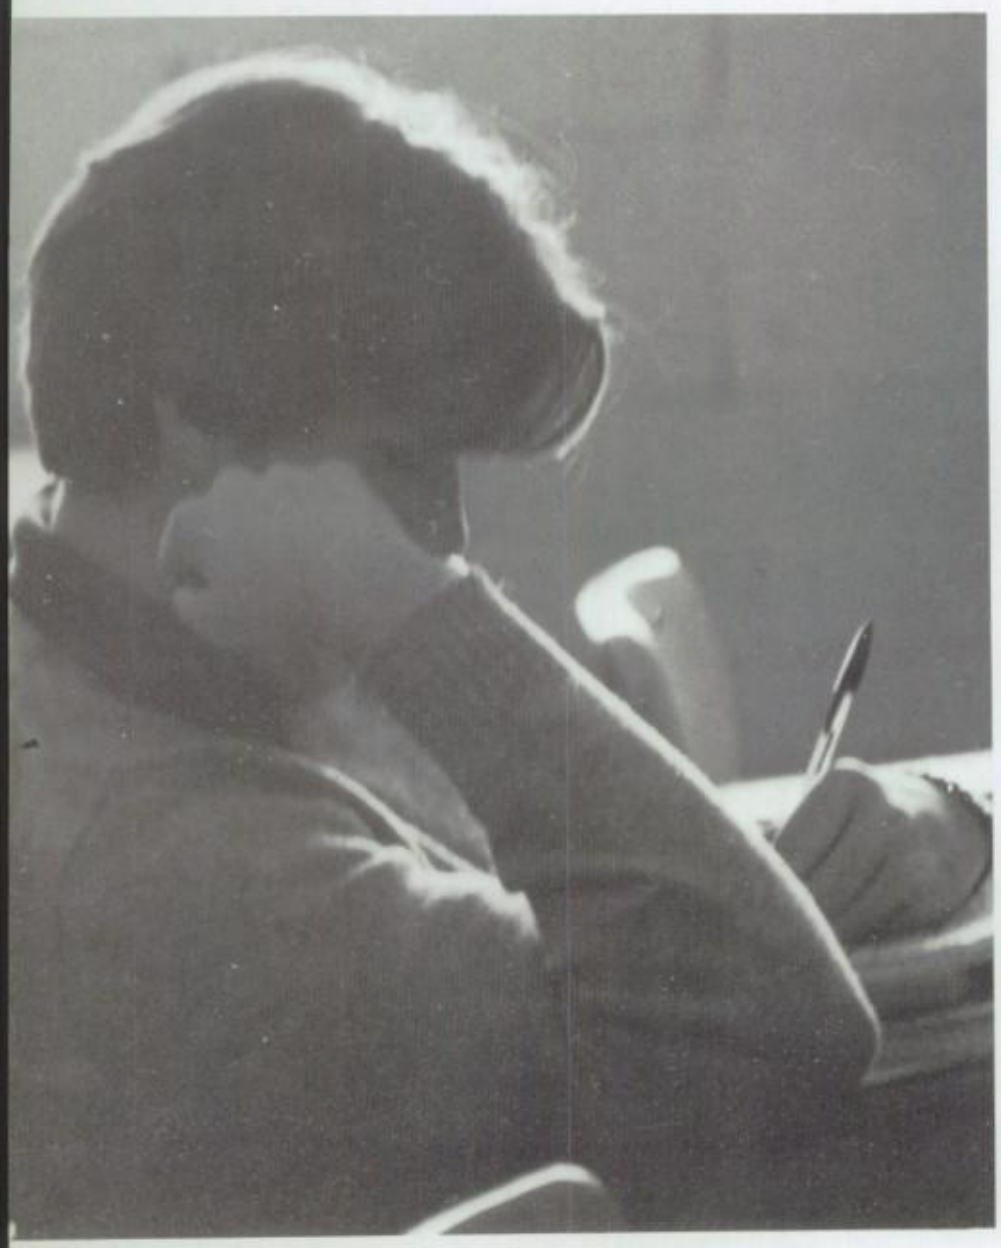
Every day after school a small but dedicated group gathered in Room 20 to put together Presidio 1981. Many weekends and sunny holidays found them at school when everyone else was at the beach.

After the theme was chosen, artists competed to have their work appear on the cover. Sophomore John Roy's design is featured. Tom Franklin did special lettering for the opening pages and Lis Rice made sure that all the seniors had their say. John Morris' stunning photo of Uni at dusk opens the book.

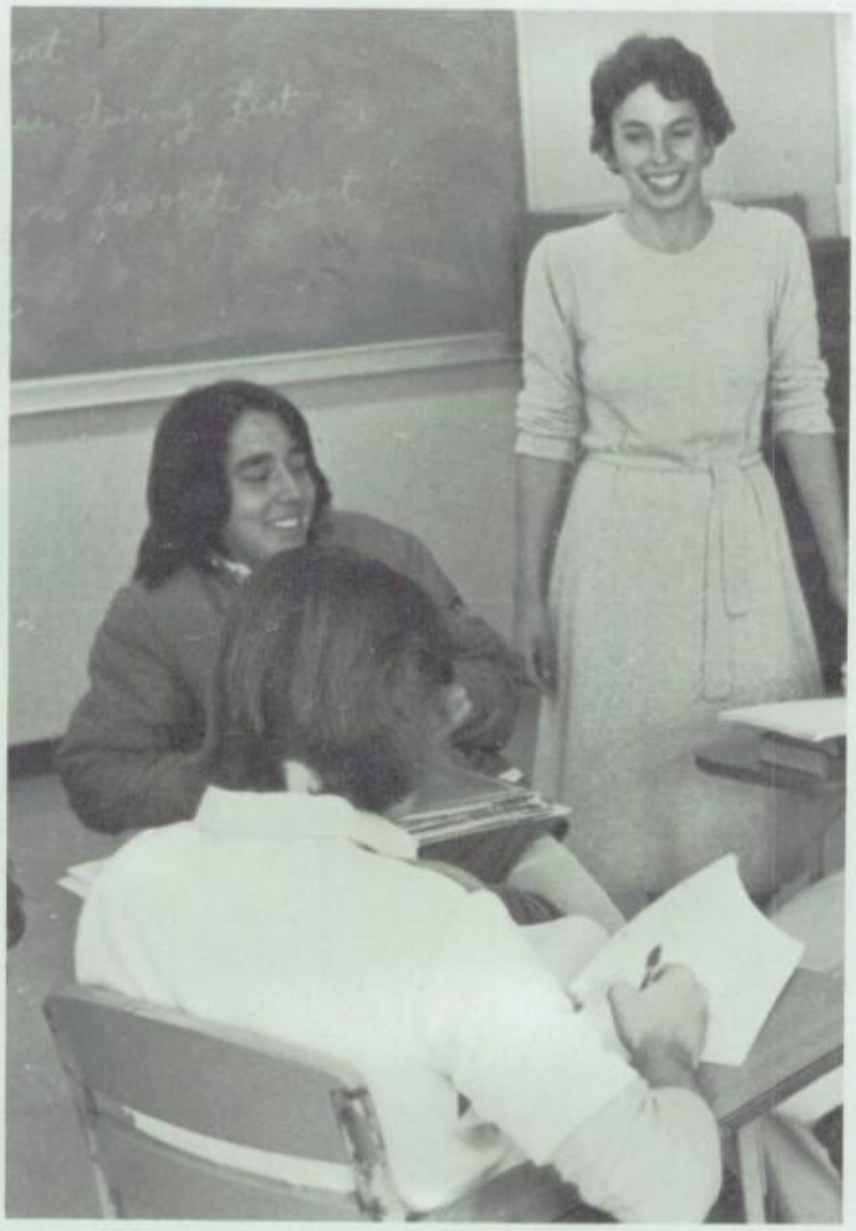
Moderator and guiding light Robin Hanley commented, "A handful of people put this yearbook together. Without the layout designs of Bill Myles, the creative copy of Rubie Crena, the darkroom skill of Jim Martin, who became photography editor at a critical time, and the scrutiny and versatility of Tony Mauro (who does it all), this book would not have been possible."

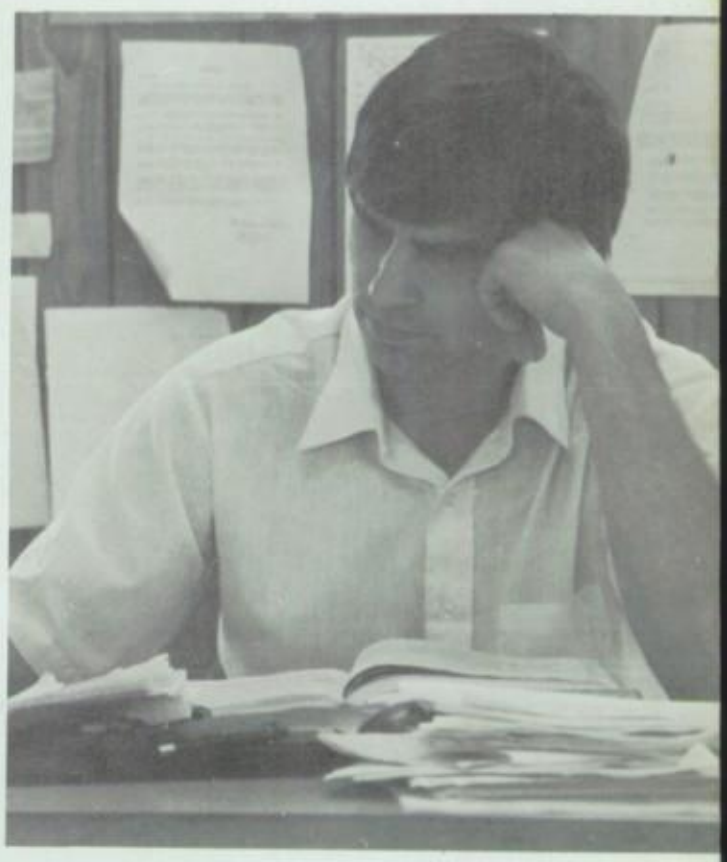
"Let's break for lunch." "Don't get catsup on the Quad-Paks!"





ENGLISH DEPARTMENT GOES 'BACK TO BASICS'





Clockwise From Below: Mr. Peck — "This one can't even spell his name the same way twice;" Always the gentleman, Mr. Shelburne helps Amy Johnson in out of the rain; "The noun goes before the verb," Ms. Mauro tells Jerry Pizarro; Ms. Niethus puts up the assignment; English puts Tim McHale in a pensive mood; Sue Purcell and Mrs. Federico discuss her essay; Paul McCarty and Ms. Bryan share a joke.

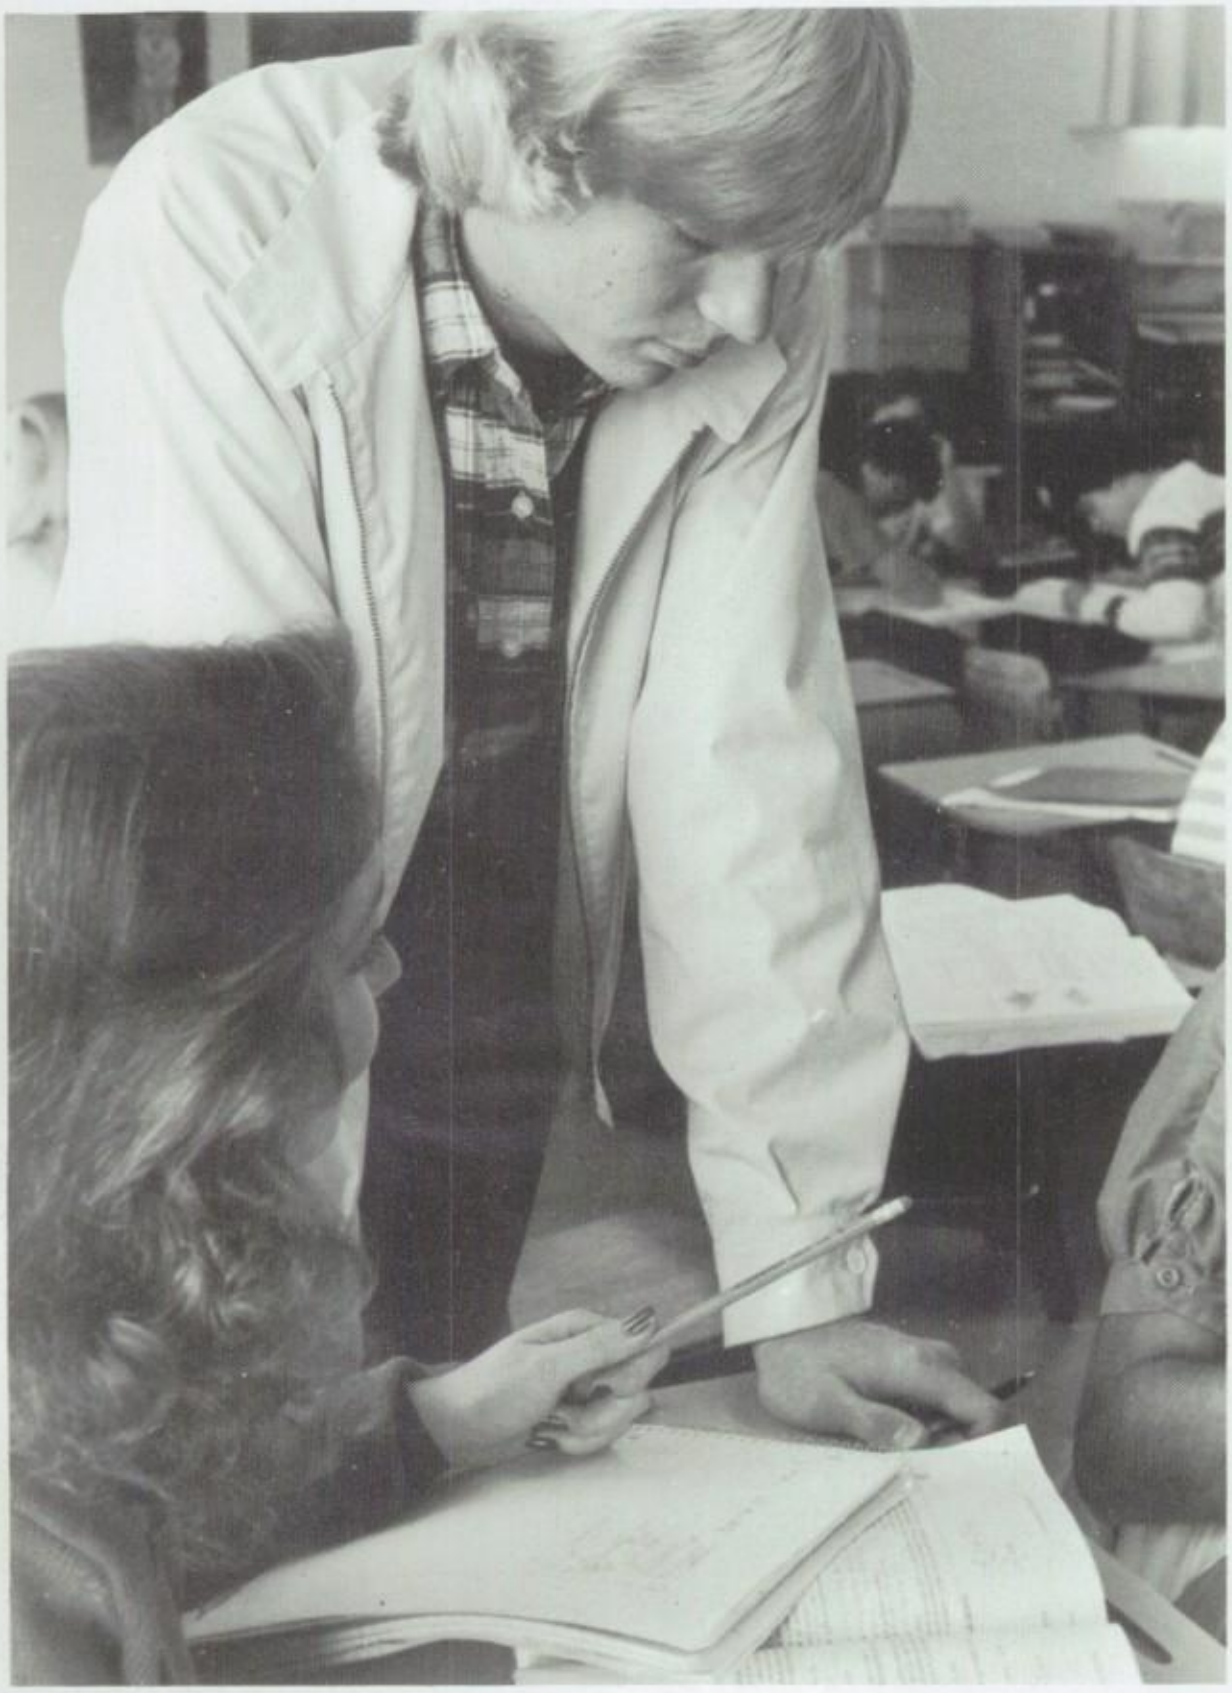
"Back to basics" seemed to be the attitude of the English Department. Freshmen and sophomore classes were tracked to enable students with similar abilities to work together. Electives were reduced for seniors and eliminated for juniors, who took a year-long course.

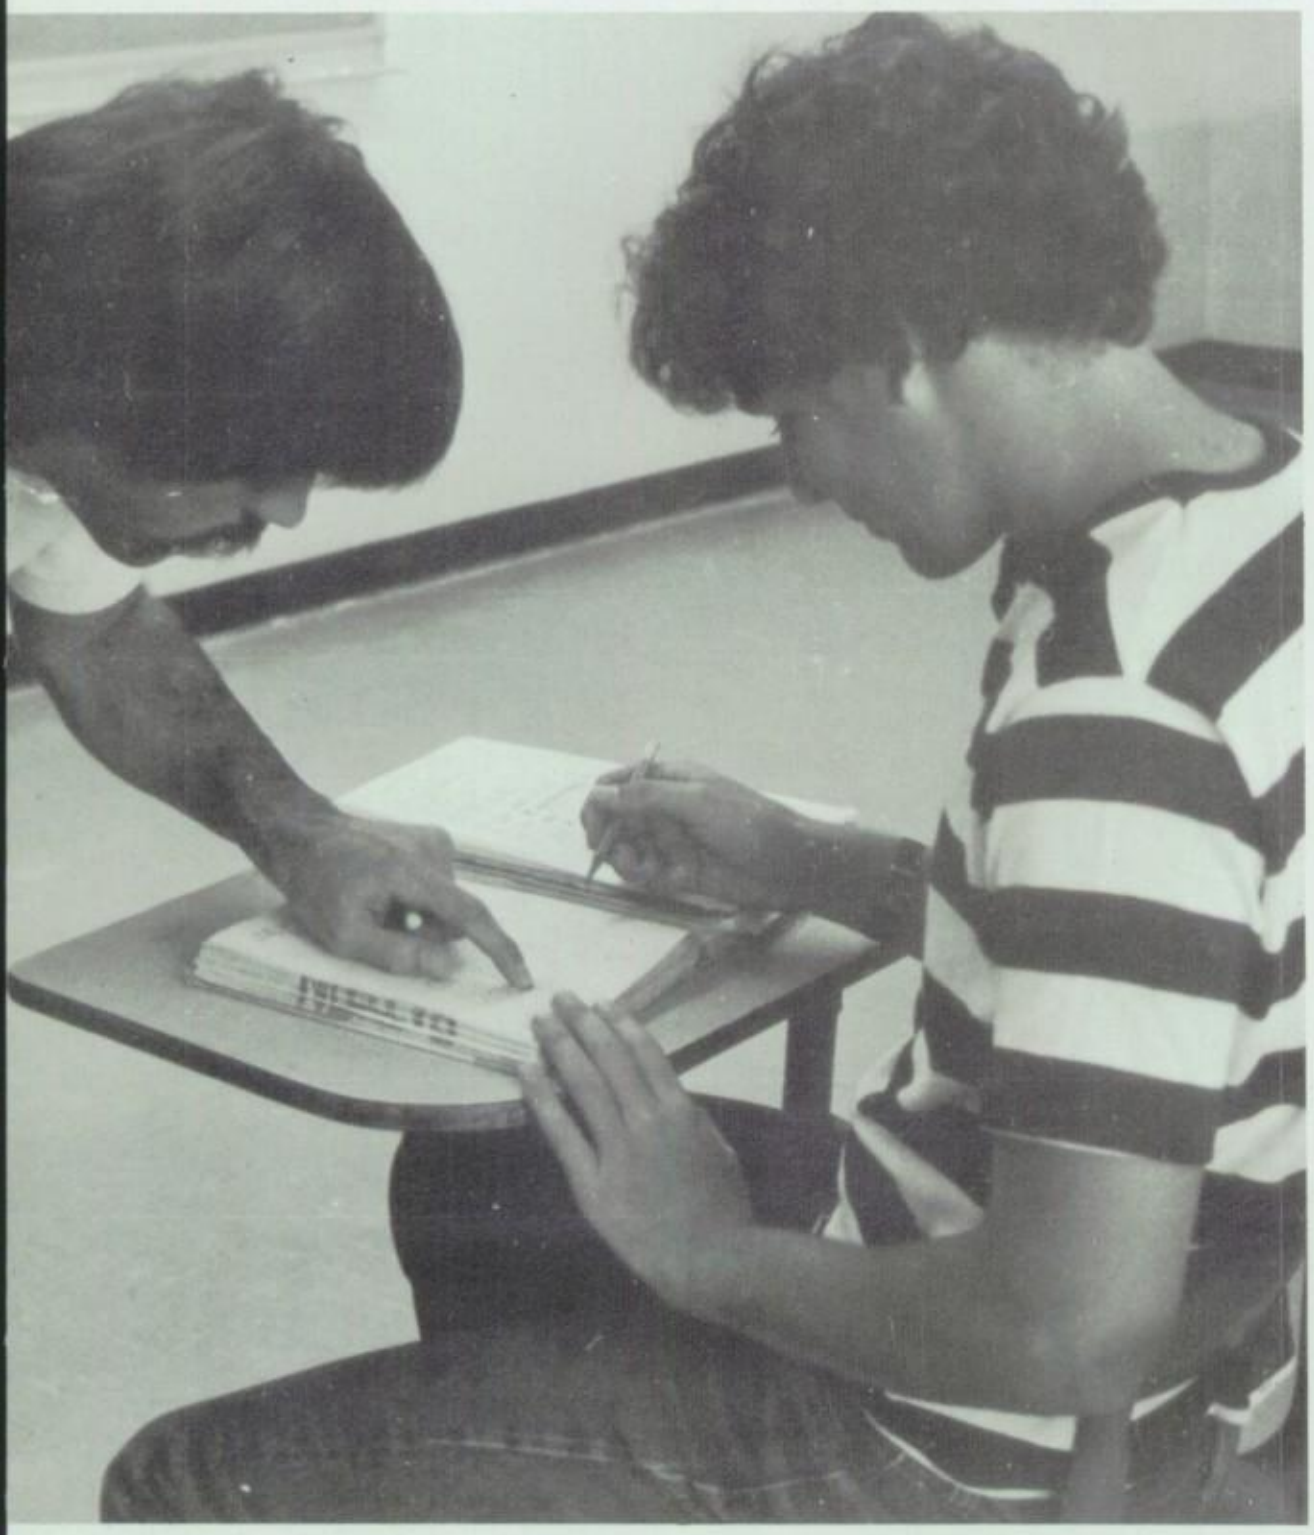
All this was done to strengthen the reading and writing abilities of students. "These are life skills," explained department chairperson Carol Hammond, "It is important that people can use them in the future, for both their education and recreation.

Fortunately, spelling and grammar weren't the only things emphasized. "We wanted students to see the beauty and power of their language," Mrs. Hammond continued. Accordingly, students read poetry, short stories, and novels as well as practiced writing.

A new "Major British Writers" course was introduced as a senior elective, and the department organized a field trip to the Renaissance Fair. Proud of their curriculum, the English teachers plan to expand and improve it further next year.

MATH DEPARTMENT: 'NO FRILLS' BUT STRONG PROGRAM





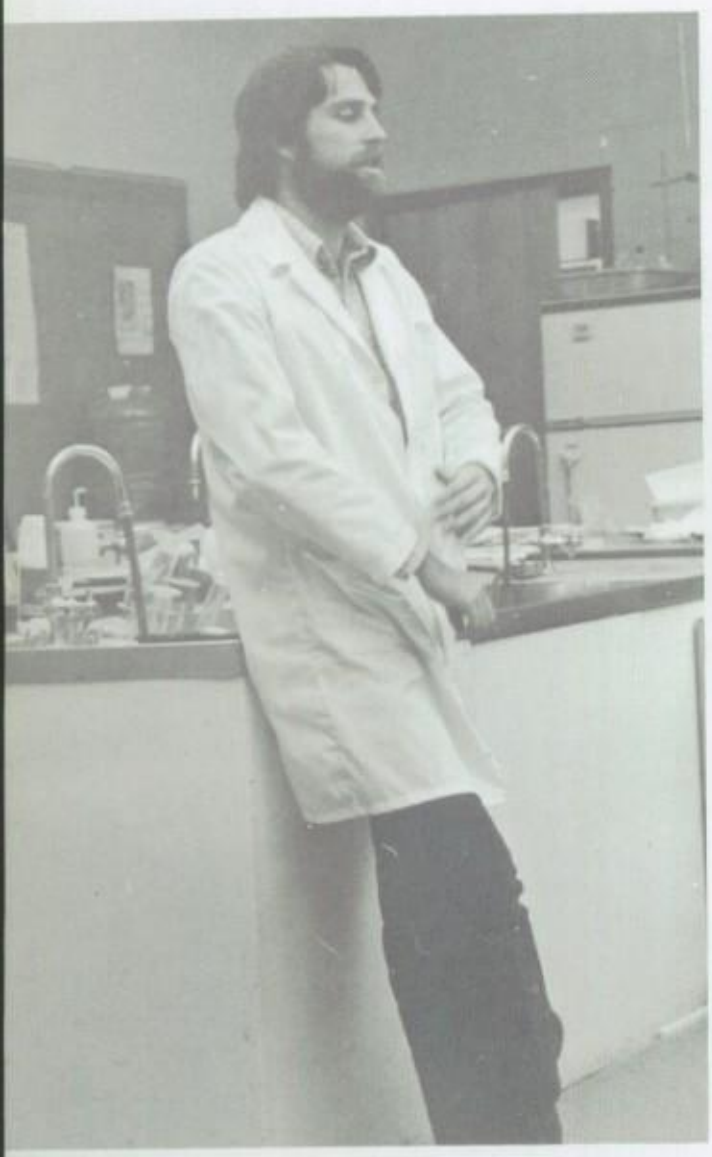
When computers finally take over the world, as the headlines warn, at least Uni students will be ready thanks to the Math Department. Mr. Wilson's Computer Literacy class introduced students to programming and the Basic computer language. They also had lots of time to practice on the three terminals in the library.

Probably the most individualized department, math has four sequences, from Honors through the Basic and selected College Prep programs to the Basic program for those who wanted to meet requirements only.

"We don't have many frills," said Chairperson Joan Breher, "just the computers. Instead we stress a curriculum that makes people strong, ready for a career. Plus, 75% of all college degrees require a good mathematics background."

The Department is proud that is Honors Program now culminates in a full year of Advanced Placement (college credit) Calculus.

Clockwise From Left: Karen Gilmore and Lisa Mangiameli can't seem to decide if it's the first minus the second times . . .; Department Chairperson Mrs. Breher explains graphing; Corinne Byrnes and Dan Otto confer on an especially tough calculus problem; "Look! Right there it says how to do it," Mr. Walbrun tells John Patton; Mr. Thomson explains trigonometry in one easy lesson.



Armed with test tube, C-clamp, and coffee mug in one hand, and chalk in the other, the Science Department strived to educate the students in the varous fields of science and to provide not only facts, but appreciation for the methods of science.

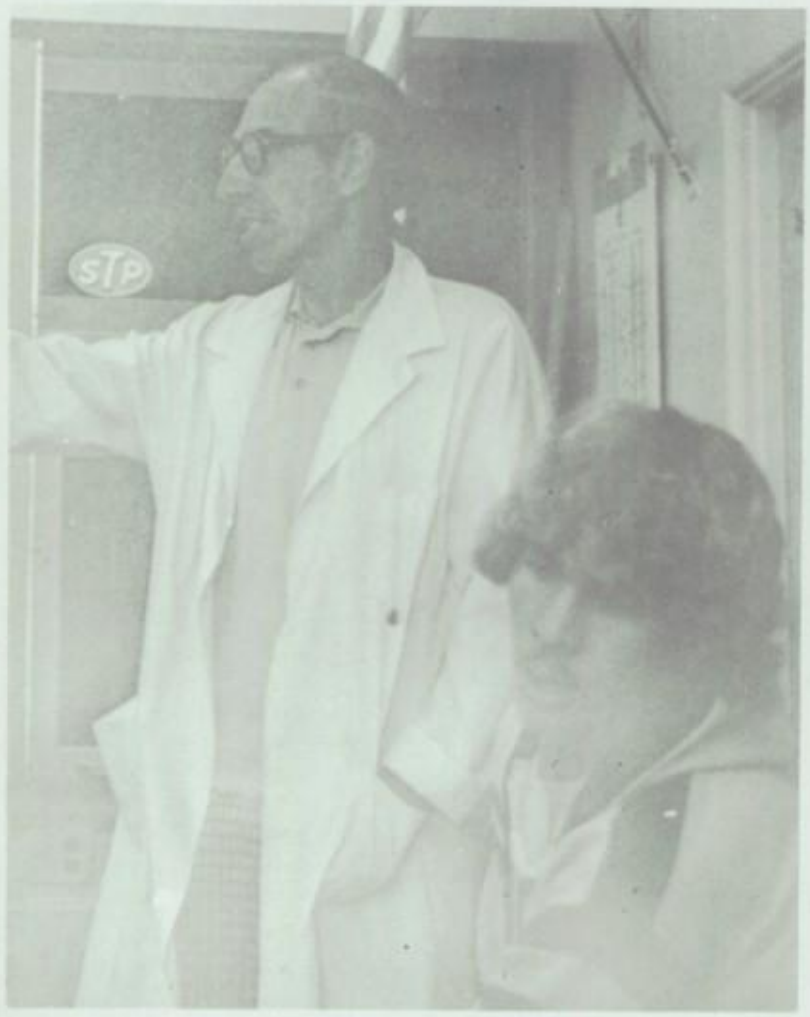
With basic, regular, and honors couses, the department met the needs of every student — from those who just wanted to satisfy their graduation requirements to those who wanted to prepare for a career in the field.

"Belonging to a technological society, the students need a strong foundation in the sciences," stressed department chairperson Steve Jacobacci.

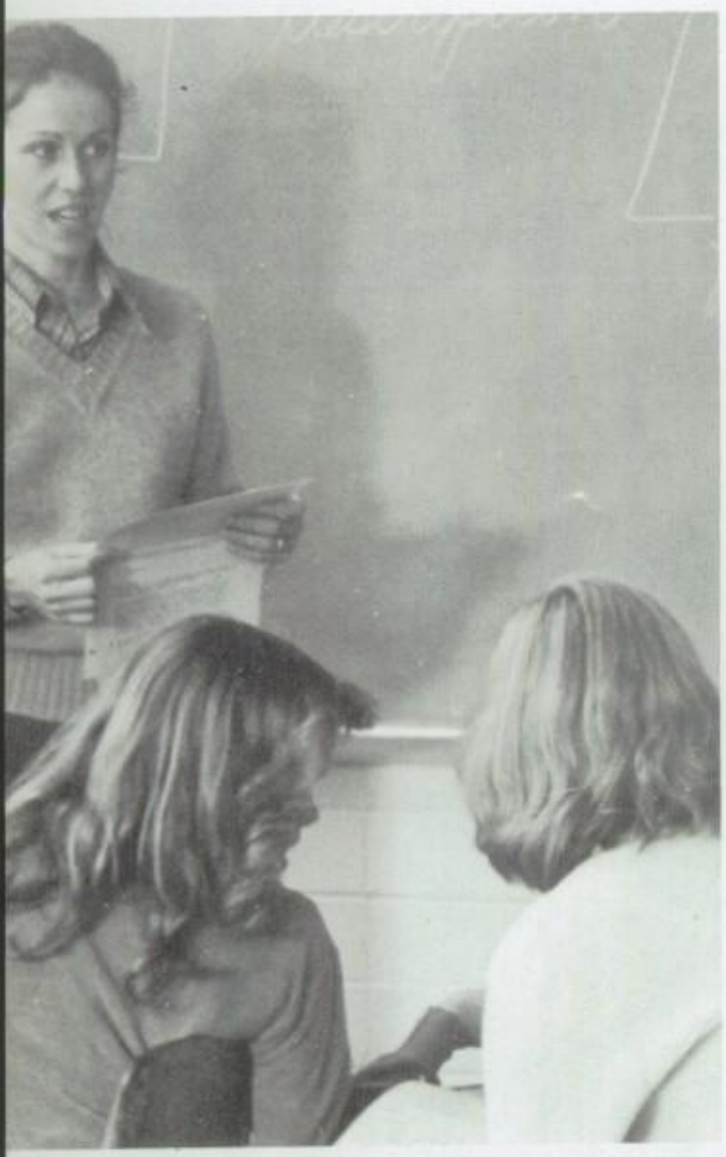
As well as verification of laws and theories and application of principles and formulas, the courses involved laboratory work, an opportunity to apply knowledge in a hands-on situation. Carts sped across the room, pendulums swung, and pulleys pulled in physics class, strong smells of bubbling solutions wafted from chemistry lab, and frogs gave their lives to help budding biologists.

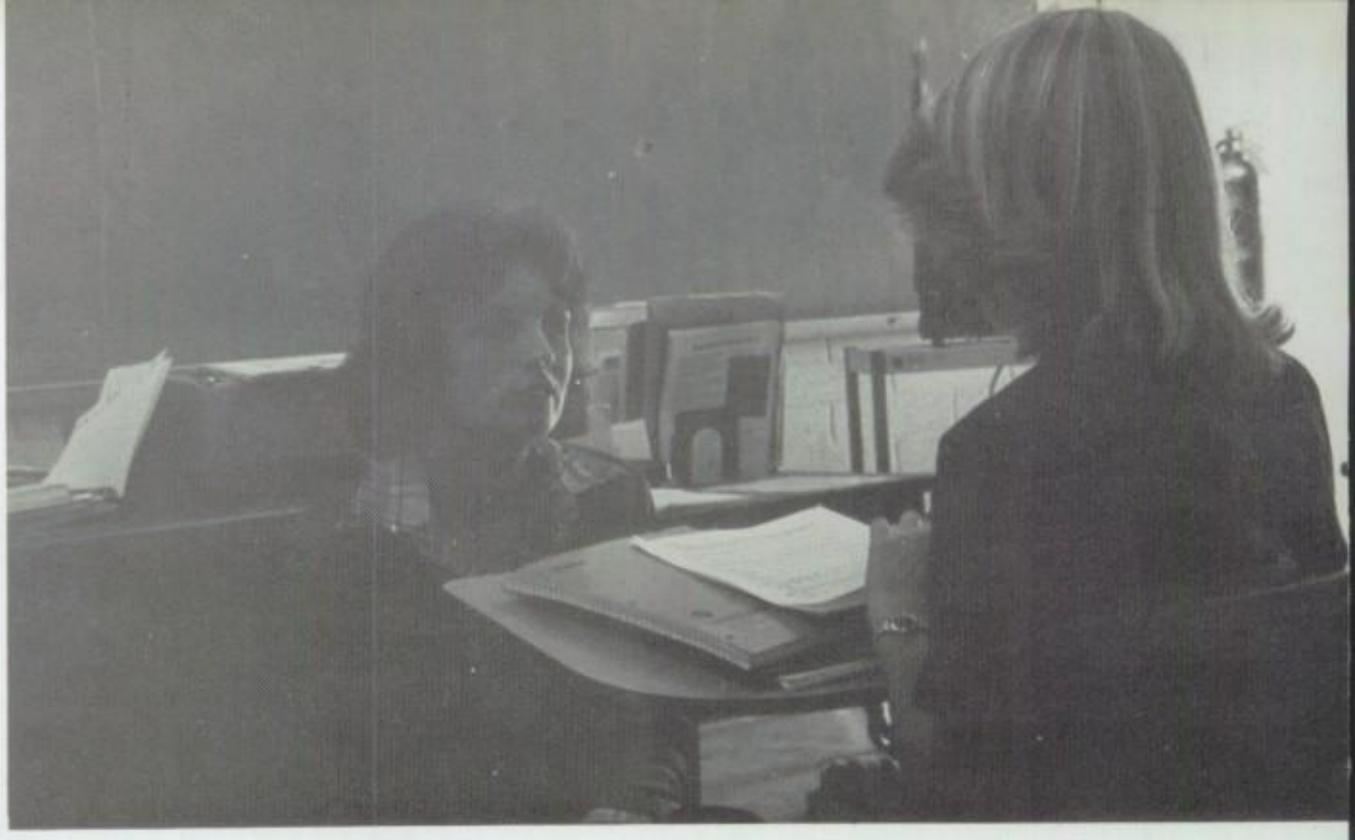
What else made the science courses best-sellers? The great cooperation and intimacy within the staff and the humor the teachers added to create a pleasant atmosphere.

SCIENCE COURSES ARE BEST-SELLERS



Clockwise From Left: Mr. Gorsich — "Whadda you mean, can we skip lab this week?"; Alfred Carini wonders if this is what happens after too much biology; Sporting the latest in designer lab wear, Mr. Tibbs brightens up any biology lab; Leigh Anderson waits for further instructions; Mr. Roth directs a student away from a boiling vat of hydrochloric acid; Sorry, Charlie, only the best trigger fish get to be studied by Tony Whitmarsh and Marie Dubreuil.



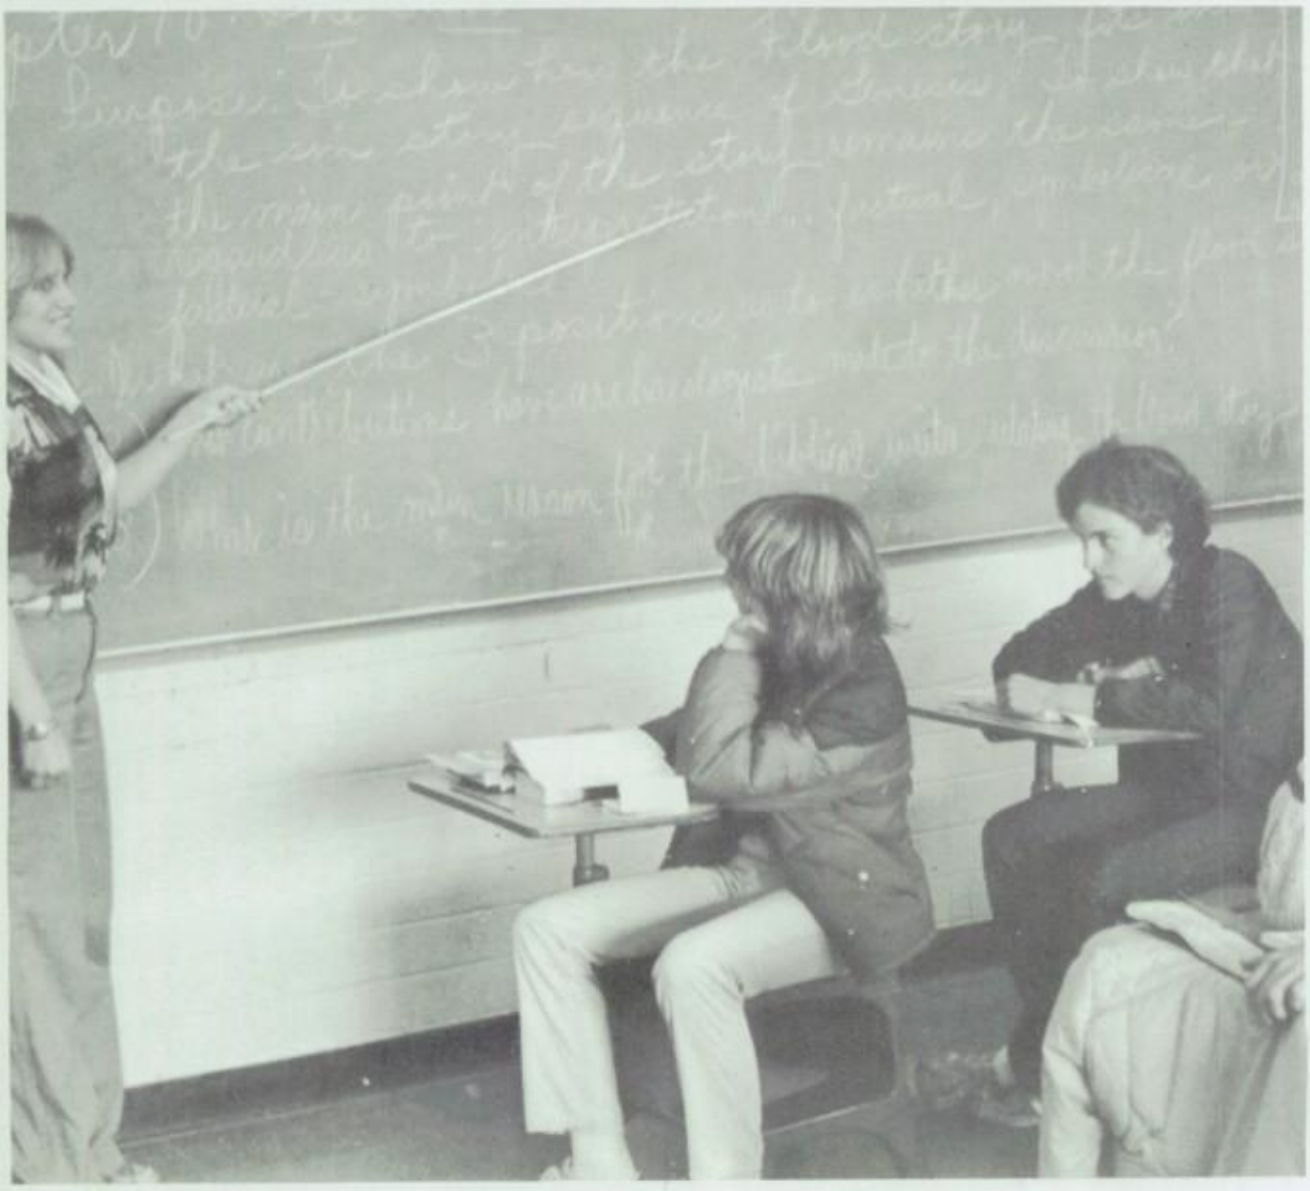


When faced with a tough decision, we immediately turn to parents, counselors or friends for help. All too often, we don't even think about a very valuable source of aid, unique to a Catholic school — the Religion Department. In addition to helping us examine profound questions, they can best give us the Christian perspective on day-to-day issues. Commented Department Chairperson Elizabeth Gorsich, "We want students to realize religion is a part of their lives and that it can be meaningful."

To insure that everyone had the same foundation, underclassmen all studied the Old and New Testament and the structure, history, and teachings of the Church. Juniors and seniors then studied the more abstract topics like death, morality, Christian styles of living, marriage and ministries, and social action.

Mrs. Adrienne Doyle, a teacher in the department, coordinated the week-long "Harvest of Hope" Hunger Awareness program. The department sponsored four food drives and a bake sale to benefit the poor of Tijuana.

RELIGION DEPT. GIVES SPIRITUAL PERSPECTIVE



Clockwise From Above: Laura Villarreal studies her notes; explaining the Flood to her class; "Wait a minute! Did you draw a moustache on St. Francis?" Fr. Tassi wants to know; "What do you mean, there is no God?"; Mrs. Doyle offers encouragement; Mrs. Nicolas gets cozy while lecturing; "It's like this, my son," Fr. LaRiviere explains to Todd Salzman.

Dealing with current events, other cultures, the past, and the factors that make us who and what we are, the Social Studies Department's purpose was to teach the students to comprehend the complex nature of society and give them skills so that they could actively participate in it.

Social Studies classes were also a time for fun. History students got a chance to recreate the 1692 Salem Witch trials. After studying Congress, American Government classes took the parts of Senators and Representatives and went through the process of passing a bill.

Two of our counselors, psychologists Dr. Karen Anderson and Dr. Ed Shafranske taught Psychology to lucky students.

SOCIAL STUDIES INTRODUCES CULTURE AND POLITICS

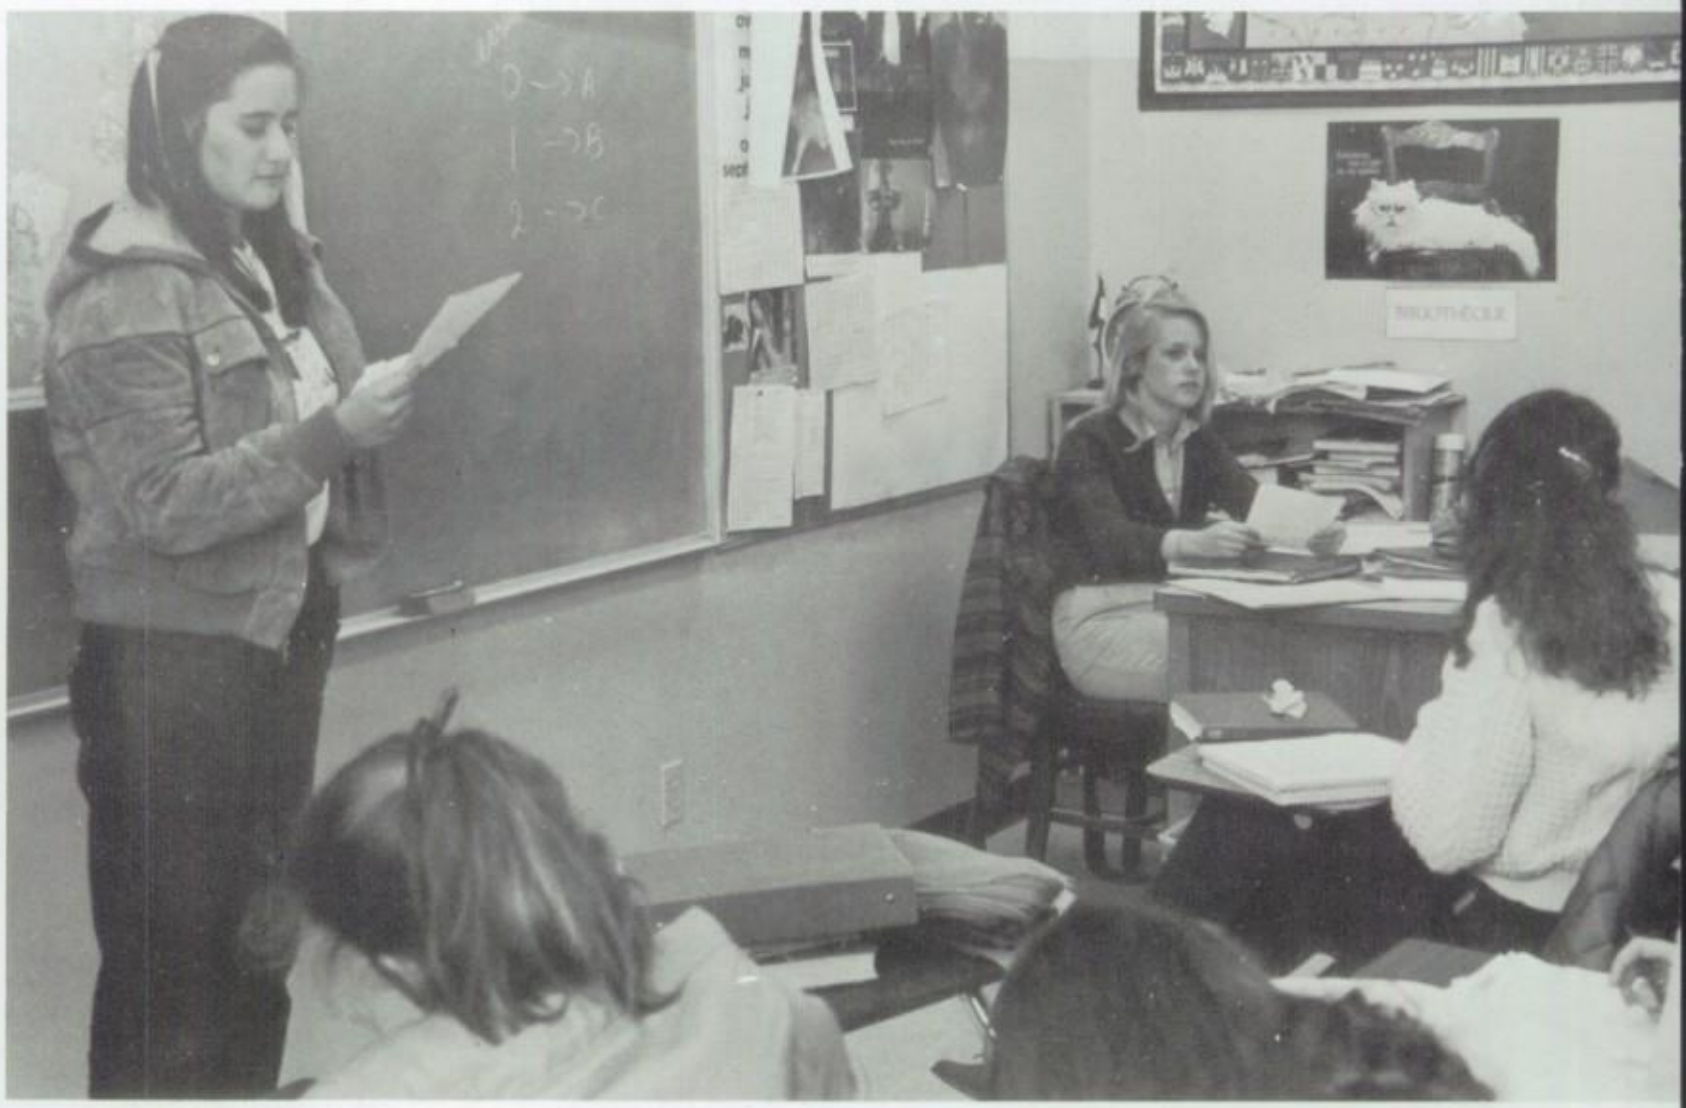
LANGUAGE DEPARTMENT OFFERS SOMETHING TO ALL



A conversation overheard one lunchtime:

"Deutsch ist am Besten."

"Non, j'aime le français."

"Yo me gusta hablar español."

"Latina non mortua est."

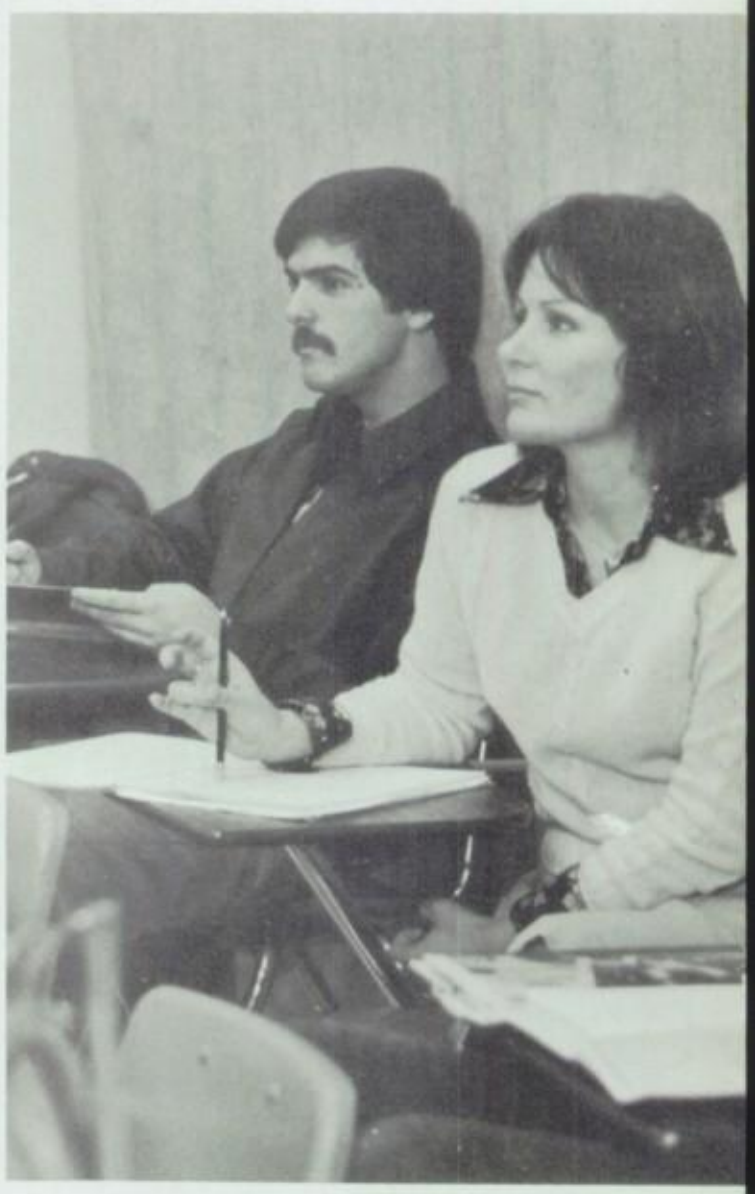
"Il italiano é la lingua di amore."

Well, maybe not, but any linguistics buff would know this means that Uni's Foreign Language Department offers German, French, Spanish, Latin and Italian. All languages except Latin, which just began this year, were offered in a four year sequence. However, it, too, got such a good response that Latin II will be taught next year.

Students were lucky in that they learned mostly from native speakers, and all the teachers had visited the home country for their language.

Fortunately, foreign language was more than remembering conjugations and learning new vocabulary. Students had fun using their knowledge in class skits, restaurant outings and a few weekend camps for intensive practice.

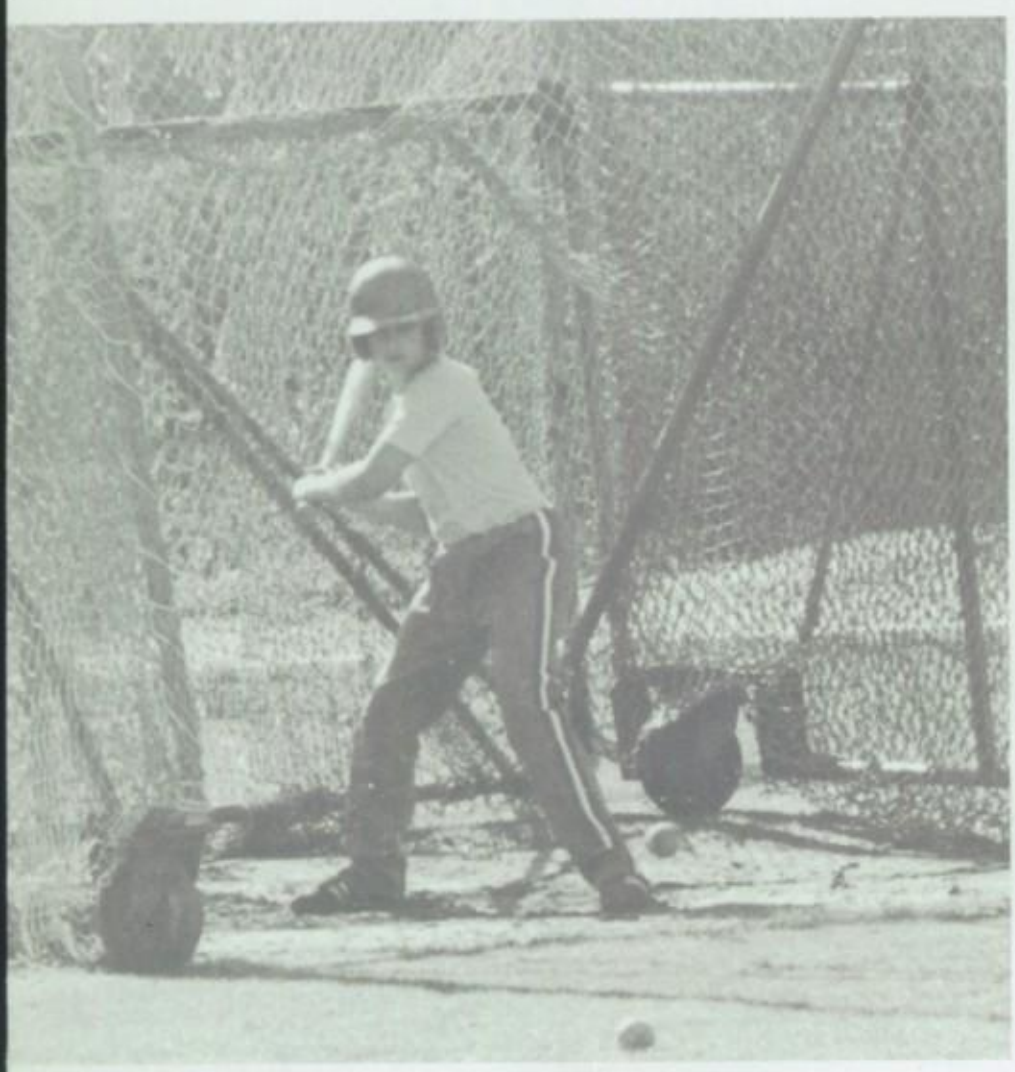
Clockwise From Below: Mrs. Chaillou and Michael Stokes takes notes on an oral report; Spanish II students listen attentively to Ms. Berson's Mexican travel story; Mrs. Hiel gathers an assignment; Androna Calles addresses her fellow students (en français, of course); Mr. Steves helps David Vaughn with a tough German translation.



P.E. STRESSES FUN AND FITNESS

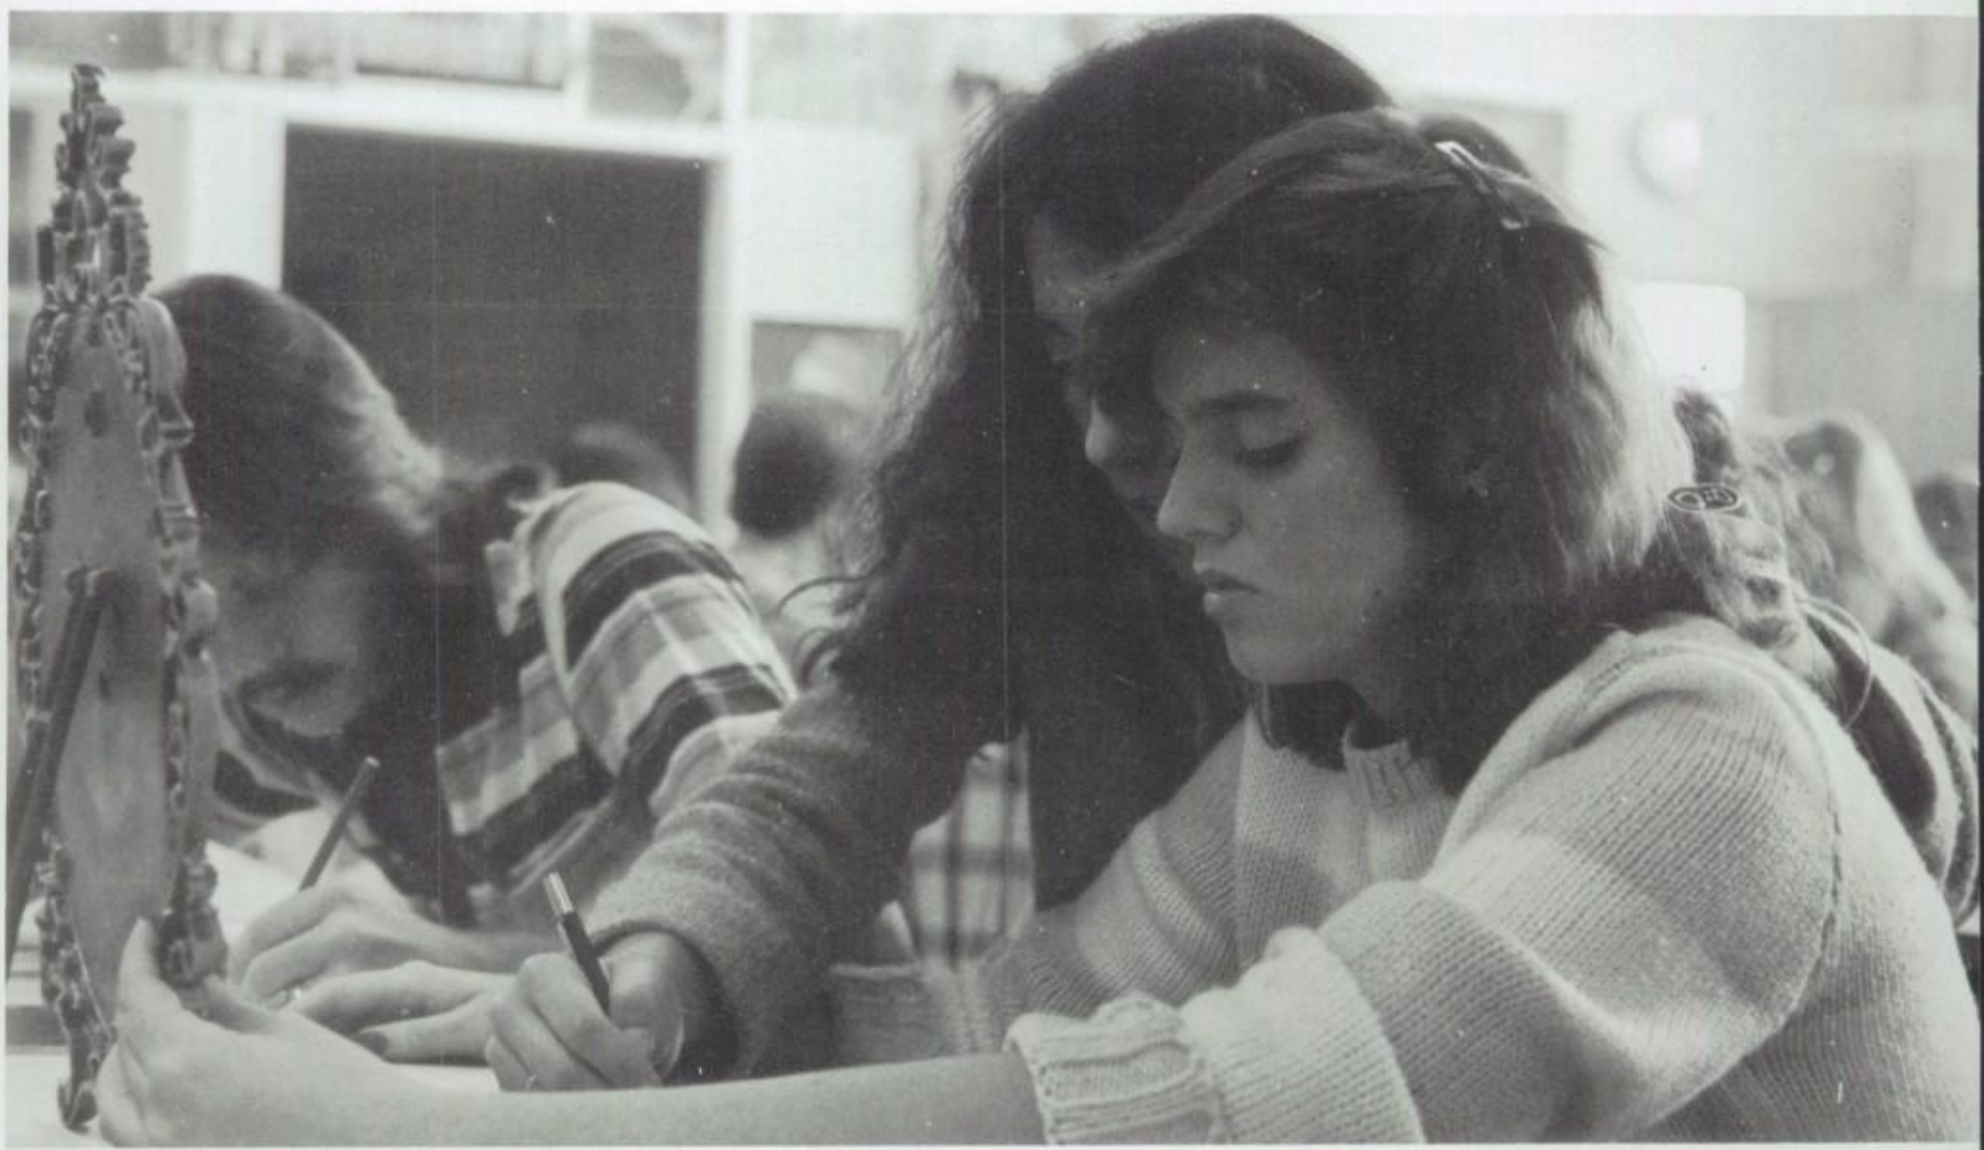
Striving for an emphasis on lifetime sports, the P.E. Department stressed the importance of exercise and physical fitness. It offered not only team and individual sports, but also such activities as the Gymnastics and Creative Dance Review, where the students performed for the school, demonstrating their talents.

A couple of new classes were introduced that grew in popularity for everyone. One was Aerobic Dancing for girls interested in adding style and rhythm to their exercising. The other was a Co-ed Fun Exercise class which emphasized recreational activities on and off campus, such as racquetball, bowling and skating.



Clockwise From Left: Building up batting skills: guys pump iron in the weight room; Mr. Serrano referees a soccer match in his class; watch the ball, not the view!; this looks like more than just a friendly game.

CO-ORDINATE DEPARTMENT EXPLORES CREATIVE



"Let's get those creative juices flowing out there!" Mrs. Estelle Kassebaum directs her sewing class. As department chairperson, "Mama Kass" feels that everyone should explore the inner world of their own creativity, a side of themselves they may not even know exists.

Beyond its preparation of those pursuing college majors in Fine and Practical Arts, the department aimed its courses at helping average students find and develop their talents. Thus the very full Arts classes delighted their instructors. They, in turn, gave their students the satisfaction of entering local, state, national, and even worldwide competitions.

Exciting new courses added pizzaz to the department's line-up. "Airbrush Design" was a big hit at the Art Show as were the stunning creations from Mr. Altamirano's stained glass class. Wetsuit and sportswear attracted unlikely students to sewing classes.

CO-ORDINATE DEPARTMENT

BUSINESS DEPT. READIES STUDENTS FOR REAL WORLD

The Business Department offered courses designed to teach practical skills which would assist students in coping with the "Real World." Ability to type can be a life saver for the college-bound student as well as for those who plan to head directly into the business world. Thanks to Mr. Ruzicka we no longer have to coax mom into staying up all night to type a term paper. With Mr. Marcus' help we should never get caught with the deadly unbalanced checkbook after Consumer Ed.

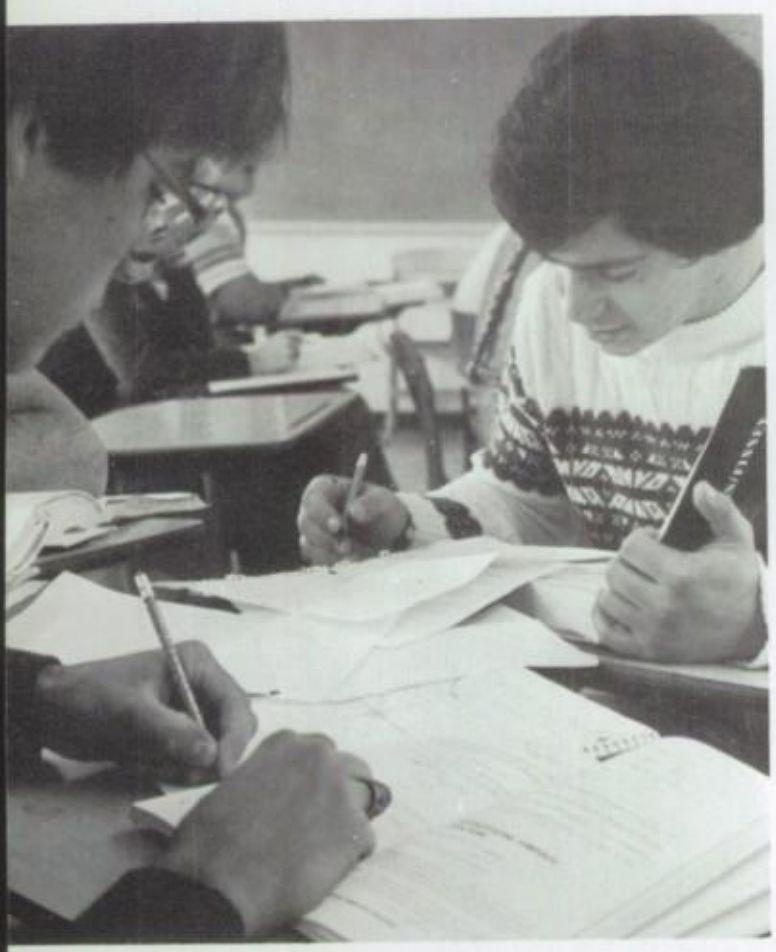
AP COURSES CHALLENGE ADVANCED STUDENTS

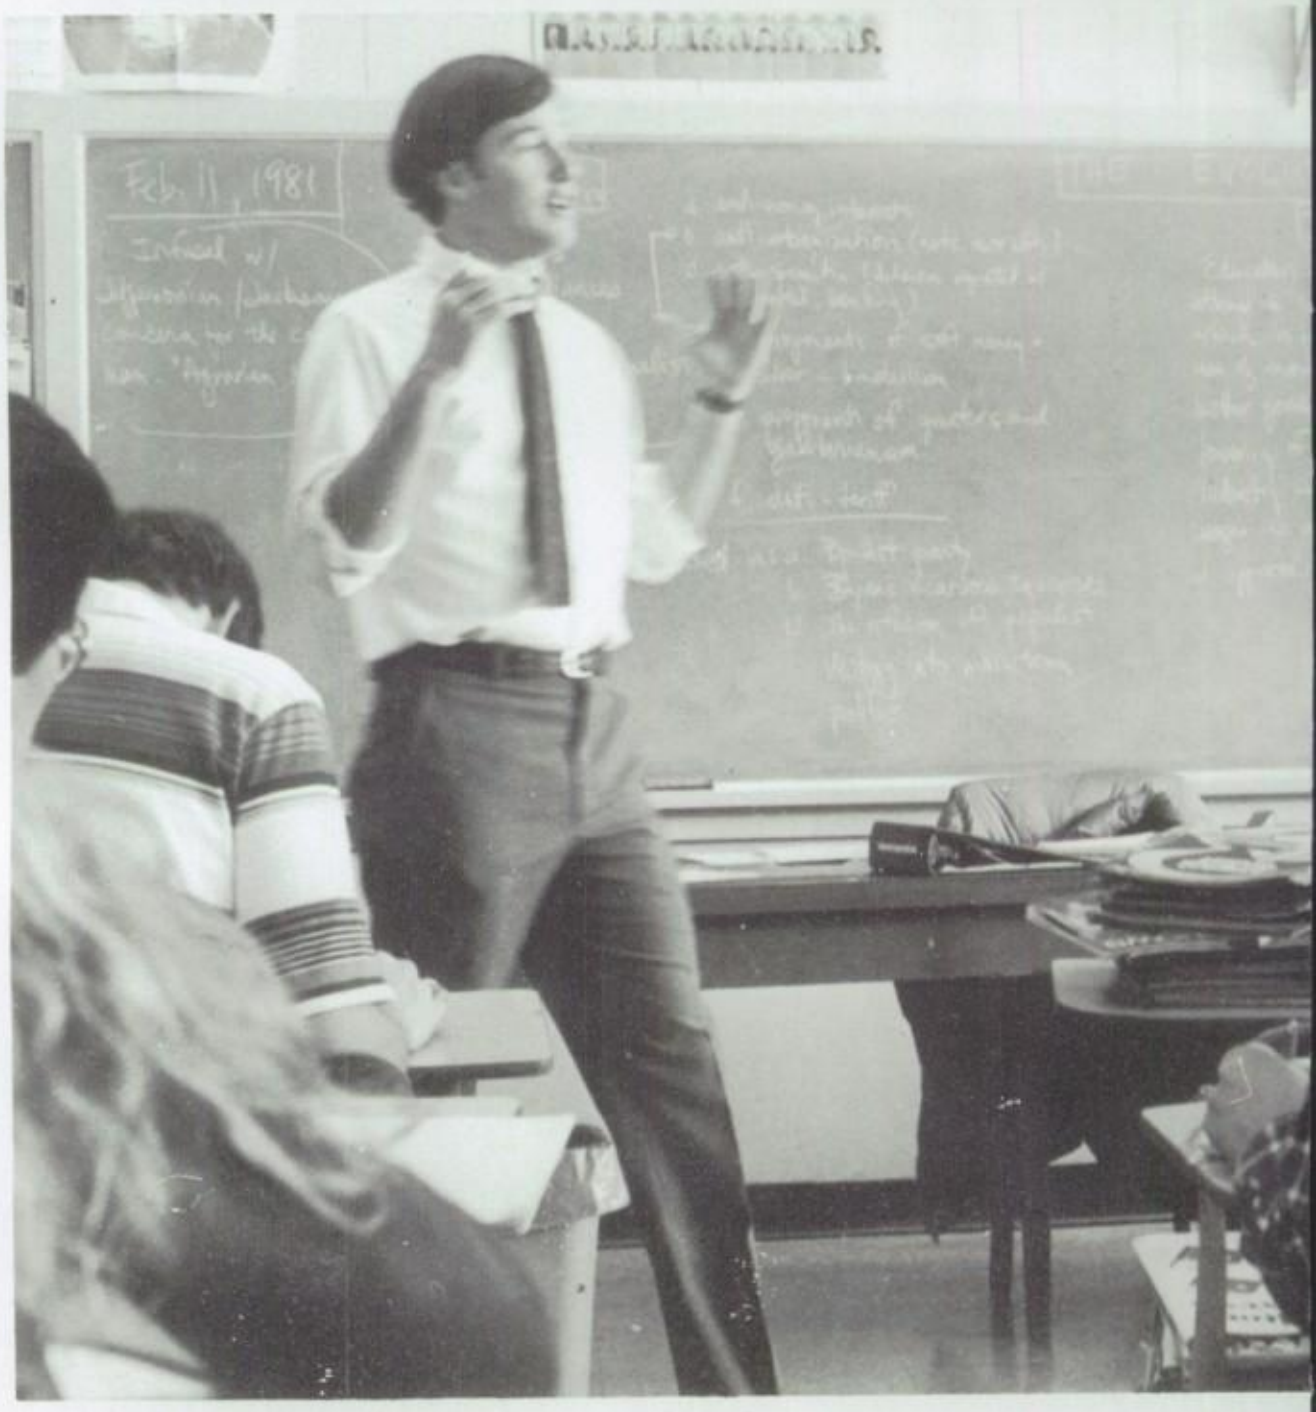
It's going to be a long three hours, so the students try to get comfortable. If it's English, they'll answer 100 questions then write three 500 word essays; if math, solve a myriad of Calculus problems; if History, interpret sources and write a detailed analysis of an event. Each spring these tests and more are administered to Advanced Placement (AP) students all over the country. Sounds like fun, right? The one hundred Uni juniors and seniors taking AP English, Calculus, and American History aren't especially thrilled about the marathon tests, but there are many reasons they enrolled in the programs.

A primary one is the challenge. Brad Lichtman, the AP History instructor, explained "Many students are in it for the heightened competition. The curriculum in these classes is intensive and a vast amount of material not considered in regular classes is covered."

"More importantly," added AP English instructor Sr. Margaret Herberich, "AP students are better prepared for college even if they don't do well on the test."

Apparently, the word is getting around. English enrollment is up for the second year and Math, taught by Mr. Boyd Thomson, and History are doing fine in their first.





Clockwise From Above: John Watson (1) and Mark Sperrazzo work together on a math problem; "If you kick my chair once more . . ." Chris Da Rosa doesn't seem too intimidated by Debbie Sether's threat; Sr. Margaret answers a question; History students work together; Ralph Schneider demonstrates his skill; Mr. Thomson shows Peter Fisher how it's done; students listen with rapt attention to Mr. Lichtman's discussion of progressivist ideology.

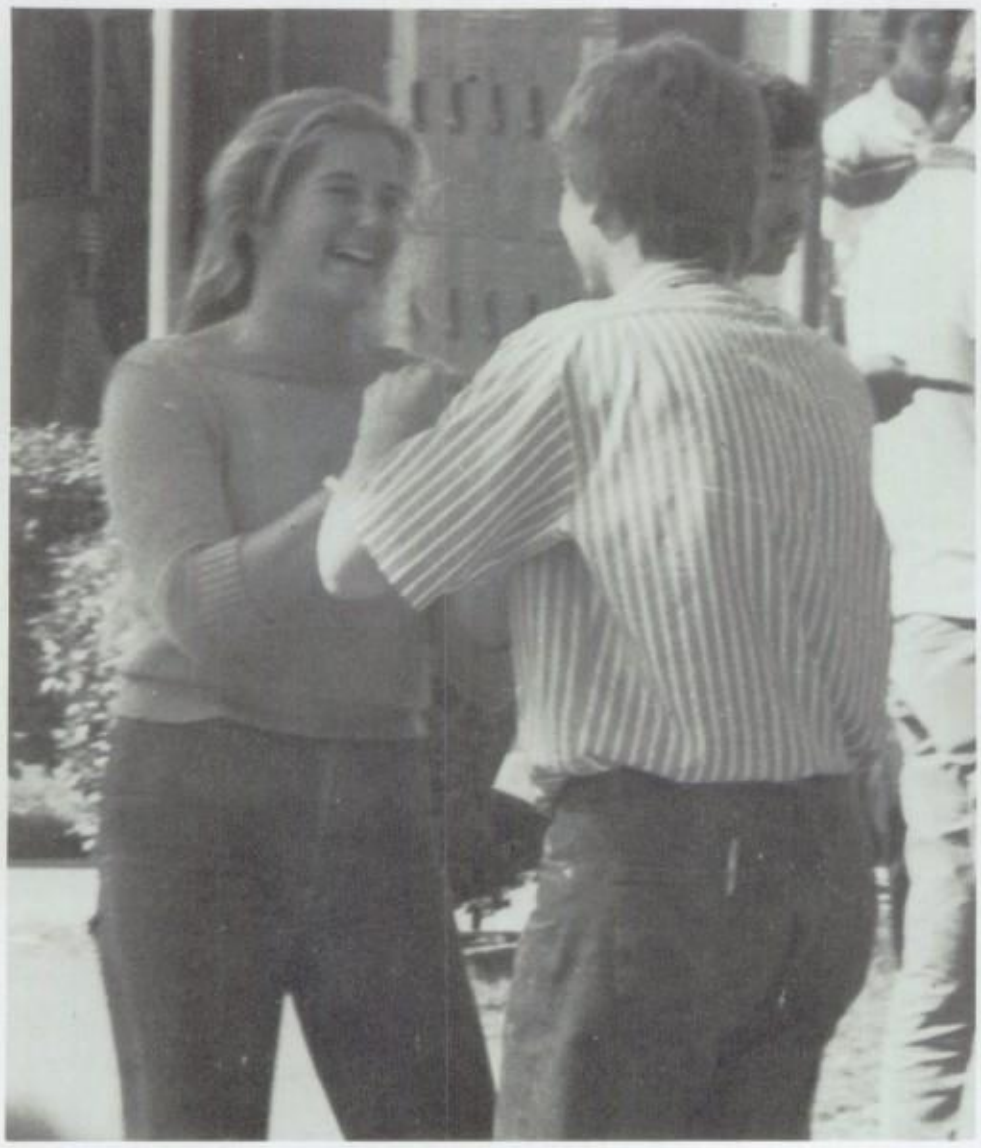
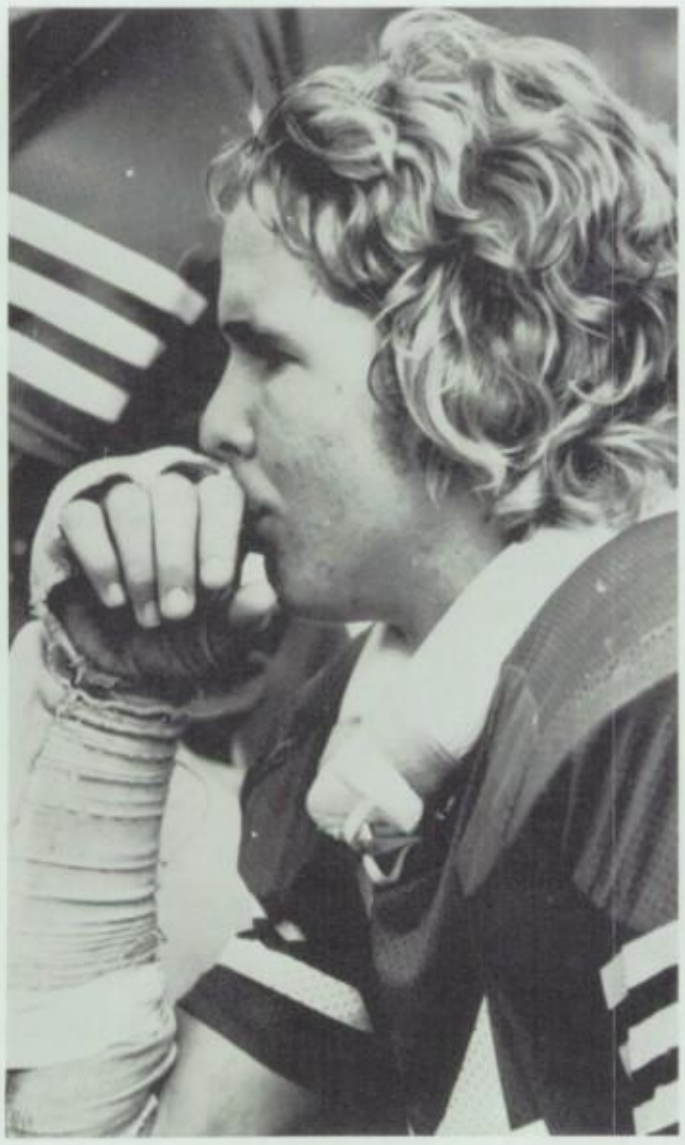
PEOPLE





We spend most of our time in the company of others so, without people, what would time mean to us? People make life happen. Each of us needs time to experience other people. During the few years spent in high school, on can get exposed to a variety of people with different backgrounds, ages, ideas, and values. This is very evident at Uni, since students come from all directions far and wide. The, like the hundreds of components in a watch, they work together to make times to remember.

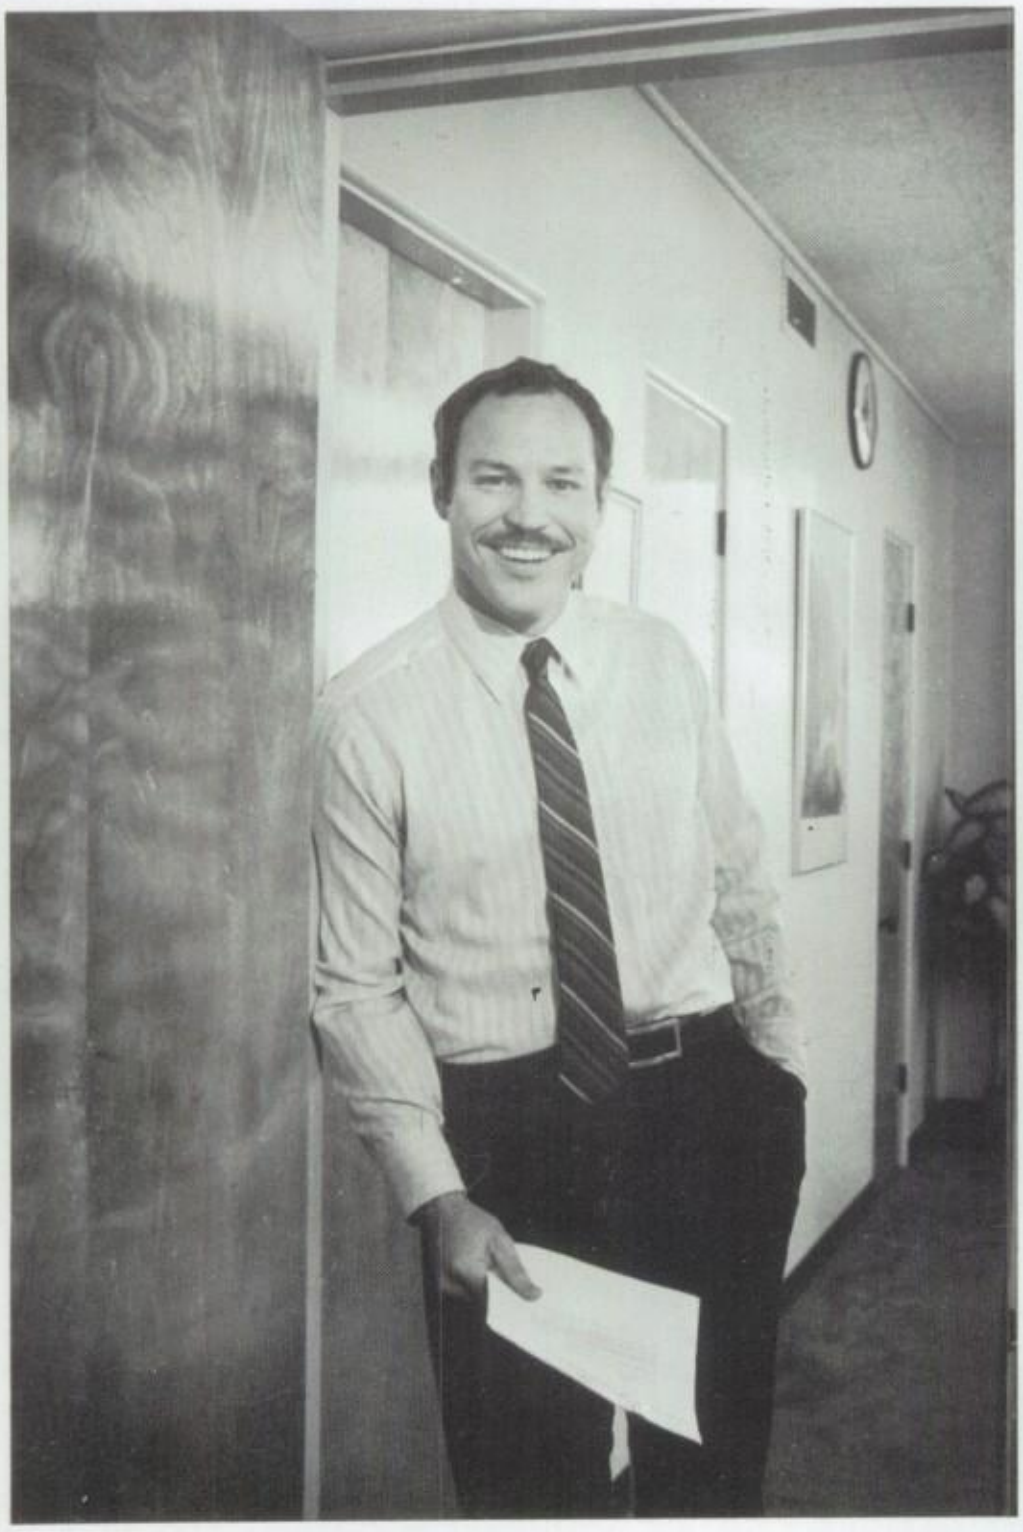
ADMINISTRATORS SET MOOD OF TRUST



JAMES G. ZOLL
Principal

Among other things, the administrative staff at Uni has changed a great deal over the past few years. One of the most important changes is our new principal, Mr. James Zoll. As a first year principal at a Catholic high school, Mr. Zoll takes notice of the difference between private and public schools. Private schools are more competitive in that the students go through a selection process before they are accepted, according to Mr. Zoll.

"The students have created an open atmosphere of communication," comments Mr. Zoll, "which has come to be an integral aspect of the school. Uni is unique in that manner."

Mr. Zoll so enjoys working with students that at times he wishes he could be a teacher.

Working together, Mr. Zoll, Ms. Ryan, Mr. Ramos, Fr. Lanphier, Mr. Marcus and the administrative staff make sure the school runs smoothly, as well as offering personal assistance to all students.

There's a special feeling in the Counseling Office — it goes beyond the bustle of messengers delivering passes and students coming to change their schedules or find out about scholarships. Mr. Shafranske, Mr. Araiza, Dr. Anderson, Mrs. Manning and Mrs. Donna Daniels (not pictured) work hard to make their office a pleasant place to be — and you can feel it.

IN REMEMBRANCE

Tracy Lynn Harrington passed away on February 20, 1981 after a long illness. She brightened our campus with her openess and ready smile. Along with all the students and faculty at University High School, we would like to remember Tracy's courage with a song her father wrote for her.

Daddy's Song
Little girl, you grew up a long-time ago.
I'll always love you, just want you to know.
Now a young lady leaving the nest.
Breakin my heart but proud and twice blest.

Sixteen years, where have they gone?
Thank you, sweet Lord, you gave her our home.

You're still my baby, just back from the war.
Dancin' and pracin', come hug me once more.
It's time to release you, it's time to be free.
You've given us happiness, Mom, Kelly, and me

Sixteen years, where have they gone?
Thank you, sweet Lord, you gave her our home.

So pick up the keys and hang up that phone.
My baby walks out the door, a young lady comes home.

Sixteen years, where have they gone?
Thank you, sweet Lord, you gave her our home.

—Phillip Harrington

Dave-

It was really fun this year. I hope you've had as much fun as me. Have a great vacation! See ya next year.

Love,
Maura
